"COPY of a LETTER of the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, forwarding to the Governor General of India the PROCEEDINGS on the TRIAL of the King of Delhi."

No. 50.

(Political.)

From R. Temple, Esq., Secretary to Chief Commissioner of the Punjab, to G. F. Edmonstone, Esq., Secretary to Government of India with the Governor General.

Lahore, 29 April 1858.

Sir,

I am now directed to forward, for submission to the Right Honourable the Governor General, the proceedings* and papers in the trial of Muhumud Bahadar Shah, ex-King of Delhi. As a supplement to the above, I am also to transmit translation of evidence of Ahsun oollah Khan, late confidential physician of the ex-King, taken before the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner. It will be in the recollection of his Lordship that the physician’s life was guaranteed on the condition of his answering satisfactorily such questions as might be put to him.

2. The trial was commenced on the 27th January 1858, and was concluded on the 9th March 1858. The proceedings are very voluminous, and have only recently been received from the General commanding Meerut division. The evidence relates not only to the specific charges on which the prisoner was arraigned, but also to the origin and character of the outbreak; and it lays bare the policy of the King’s Government and the internal economy of the rebel army during the siege of Delhi. On the whole, it is deeply interesting and instructive, whether viewed practically, politically, or historically.

3. In brief terms, it may be said that the documentary evidence comprises the system in which the General Government was conducted; the raising of loans; military arrangements; the communications with foreign powers and neighbouring chiefs; the passages in the native newspapers relating to the war between the English and the Persians. There are also, of course, many papers of a miscellaneous character. The oral evidence describes the occurrences of the outbreak, and the sad circumstances connected with the massacre of the Christians in the palace; it also throws some light on the origin of the mutiny and the rebellion. The general effect of the evidence, documentary and oral, is to present to the mind a wonderfully vivid picture of all that happened at Delhi during the eventful months between the 12th May and 20th September 1857.

4. The papers referring to the system of the King’s Government exhibit in a remarkable manner the active personal share which the King himself took in the conduct of affairs. However wrongly he had assumed his position, it must be admitted that his orders were not unworthy of the situation. He did make some effort to preserve order in the city, to repress rape and murder in the villages, LETTER RELATING TO THE

to check malversation, to restrain the excesses of the soldiery; but it is clear, from first to last, he was unable to establish an administration either within or without the city. In the tracts nominally ruled by the King there was scarcely the semblance of authority; nor was there any protection for life or property. In but few cases did the King's agents succeed in collecting revenue from the districts. From its own records, the Mogul rule, while it lasted, seems to have been a reign of terror, and a period of intolerable anarchy to the people. Then the papers show the financial straits to which the King was driven, and the numerous forced loans and other contributions exacted from the monied classes in Delhi. The military papers do not materially elucidate the plan of the operations, but they show that the mutinous army was utterly insubordinate to the Government it had set up, and that its discipline was entirely relaxed. The papers comprising the correspondence with other powers indicate the deputations dispatched by the King of Delhi to the Shah of Persia; but they do not show any actual connexion between these intrigues and the Bengali mutinies. Whether in the absence of any proof, there is reason to infer such connexion, will be considered presently. The correspondence with Indian chiefs, proves that the chiefs round Delhi were in subjection to the King; but there is nothing to show that any considerable number of princes gave in their adhesion, nor that any sovereign or powerful prince intrigued with the King. The extracts from the native newspapers at Delhi certainly breathe a hostile spirit to the British, and abound with absurd stories of the successes of the Persians in the war then waging, and their probable advance upon India.

5. The oral evidence goes far to show, that while the troops at Delhi were prepared for the outbreak, and the palace retainers were in some measure ready for mischief, yet the King himself and his counsellors had not contemplated taking the lead in so serious a movement. Consequently, when the mutineers first arrived, the King's conduct was most vacillating. He asked them why they had come to him, for he had no means of maintaining them. They replied that unless he joined them, they could not make head against the English. He immediately yielded, however; and by his subsequent behaviour, he identified himself with the cause of the rebels, and made their acts his own. As regards the massacre of forty-nine Christians within the palace walls, it is probable that the King himself was not a prime mover in that dreadful deed, and that if left to his own devices, he would not have had the prisoners murdered. There is little doubt that he could have saved them had he been so minded. It is quite certain that he made no effort to do so, and from his own subsequent letters, it is clear that he was a consenting party to the murder.

6. Upon all this evidence, the Court have found the prisoner guilty of four charges, which may be thus epitomised:

1st. Aiding and abetting the mutinies of the troops.

2nd. Encouraging and assisting divers persons in waging war against the British Government.

3rd. Assuming the sovereignty of Hindoostan.

4th. Causing and being accessory to the murder of the Christians.

Concurring in the justice of the verdict, and considering the prisoner to have been guilty of these grave felonies, the Chief Commissioner has to recommend, that the said prisoner shall be dealt with as a felon, regard only being had to the guarantee of his life, which was granted to him at the time of his capture. And the Chief Commissioner has arrived at the deliberate opinion of the prisoner's guilt, after having carefully examined the evidence adduced at the trial, and after having tested it by all the information which he has obtained since the commencement of the outbreak, and by his personal knowledge of the character both of the prisoner and of the Mahomedan population of Delhi.

7. After the above brief analysis of the proceedings in this most remarkable trial, I am now to submit the Chief Commissioner's opinions on the real causes and origin of the mutiny and rebellion. A right understanding of this matter is of the last importance to the future stability of the empire.

8. In the first place, it is to be observed that the prisoner was not charged with any offence previous to the 11th May 1857. Whatever may have been the the King's participation in the events subsequent to that date, nothing has transpired on the trial, or on any other occasion, to show that he was engaged in a previous conspiracy to excite a mutiny in the Bengal army. Indeed, it is Sir John Lawrence's very decided impression that this mutiny had its origin in the army itself; that it is not attributable to any external or any antecedent conspiracy whatever, although it was afterwards taken advantage of by disaffected persons to compass their own ends; and that its proximate cause was the cartridge affair, and nothing else. Sir John Lawrence has examined many hundreds of letters on this subject from natives, both soldiers and civilians. He has, moreover, conversed constantly on the matter with natives of all classes, and he is satisfied that the general, and indeed almost the universal opinion in this part of India, is to the above effect.

9. It may be true that discontented sepoys worked upon the minds of their less guileless comrades, and persuaded them that a sinister but systematic attempt was about to be made on their ceremonial religion; and that in many regiments the majority were misled by designing individuals. But as a body, the native army did really believe that the universal introduction of cartridges destructive of their caste was a matter only of time. They heard (and believed as they heard) that the measure had been resolved on, and that some sepoys had been punished even by death for refusing to use the objectionable cartridges. They thought, therefore, that their only chance of escape was to band together, to refuse the cartridges, and to resist if force should be attempted by the Government; and the incendiary fires at the different stations were intended by the sepoys as a warning to their officers and to their Government of the feelings which had taken possession of the native army. Such truly was the origin of the mutiny; and this, I am to repeat, is the one circumstance which has forced itself upon the Chief Commissioner's conviction in all that he has seen and heard. This is the one fact which stands out prominently in all the native letters which he has examined, in all the statements of the natives whom he has cross-questioned, and in all the conversations between the natives themselves, which have been reported by our spies in Delhi and elsewhere.

10. As against the above conclusion, it might perhaps be urged that the mutiny first broke out at Meerut, where the new cartridges had never been used; and it is no doubt true that the men of the 3d Light Cavalry had never been asked to use the new cartridges, and were imprisoned for refusing cartridges of the old description, and perfectly objectionable. But the Chief Commissioner has always understood that the cartridges which these men did refuse happened to be enveloped in paper of a colour different from that generally used before; and he believes that this unfortunate circumstance would account for the bitter mistrust which was excited in their minds. Indeed, a similar circumstance produced the same effect upon the 19th Native Infantry and other regiments in Bengal. Any person conversant with native character can understand how easily such a thing might be misinterpreted by men whose imagination and feelings had been wrought up to the belief that an attempt was in contemplation to injure them in so vital a point as that of caste and religion. Again, it has been said that the sepoys after the mutiny fired off some of these impure cartridges against our loyal troops during the siege of Delhi; but it is very doubtful whether this really took place. If it did, however, still the men might have escaped the fancied pollution by refraining from biting the cartridges, or they might have had the cartridges remade in a manner which would obviate the supposed impurity; or the cartridges might have been used only when the mutineers were becoming desperate, as their final defeat drew near. On the whole, the Chief Commissioner considers that neither of the above arguments is at all sufficient to weaken a conclusion so strong upon other grounds.

11. As an instance of the evidence which might be produced in favour of the above conclusions, I am to mention an important and interesting conversation which the Chief Commissioner and Brigadier General Chamberlain recently held at Umballah with a jemadar of the 3d Punjab Native Infantry. This man, a Bhajpoonca Rajpoot by caste, and a native of Hindostan, was at Ghazipore on furlough when the mutiny broke out; he and his two brothers joined an English indigo planter, and during seven months were of great use to that gentleman on several occasions of difficulty and disturbance. He was on his way thence to rejoin his regiment in the Punjab when he met the Chief Commissioner's camp at

Umballah.
Umballah. Though holding a certificate of his good conduct and services at Ghazepore, he still, even at Umballah, seemed doubtful of the reception he would meet with. He was reserved at first, and it was only during a lengthened examination that he by degrees described what he had heard and seen. In this conversation he affirmed that there was a general belief among the Hindostanee sepoys that the destruction of their caste and religion had been finally resolved on by the English. "So strong was this belief," he said, "that when I talked with the relations and friends of sepoys, and endeavoured to combat their views, I ended in almost believing that they were right. Then, again, when I talk to you and hear what you say, I see how foolish such ideas were." He added that the English officers' little knew how strong this impression had become in the native army; that more than five years ago the belief had existed, and had nearly brought on an émeute; that the caravanserais for travellers and the supply depôts (sarcées and bardashkhamas) erected by Government on the Grand Trunk Road were said to be devised with the object of destroying castes, and that before long impure kinds of food would be prepared in them which the people would be forced to buy and eat.

12. Such was the prevalent belief in the native army before the outbreak. The first excitement, according to the Chief Commissioner's belief, the first feelings of disaffection, arose among the high caste Hindus, Brahmans, and Rajpoots of both the infantry and the cavalry; this disaffection then spread to the Mahomedans of the same regiments. With them also the feeling was at first a desire to resist the infringement of their caste and religion. Then, when they saw that the mutiny, which had now settled deep in the minds and hearts of the Hindus, might be expanded into a political movement calculated to subserve Musulman interests, they sedulously fanned the flame. But while thus the Hindus and Mahomedans of the line had united to mutiny, the Chief Commissioner's impression is, that in the first instance the Hindostanee Irregular Cavalry did not join in the combination. While the regular army chiefly came from Oude and the districts surrounding it, the irregular troopers were drawn from the districts within a circle of a hundred miles round Delhi. They had, therefore, no personal connexion with the line; and, except the mutual bond of religion, they had little or nothing in common even with the Mahomedans of the regular cavalry. In the many native letters which he examined at the outset of the disturbances the Chief Commissioner found nothing to implicate the irregulars, though the misconduct of the 10th Irregular Regiment at Nowsherah is a grave exception to what has been said above in regard to this branch of the service. But, of course, when Delhi had been seized by the mutineers, and when rebellion spread to the very districts whence the irregulars came, then very many of them also joined the movement. From that time the Mahomedan soldiers and the Mahomedan population became more actively hostile than the Hindus. This, indeed, is easy to understand, fanaticism and ferocity being especially inculcated by the tenets of their religion.

13. But although stories against the British were fabricated and circulated by persons with ulterior designs; although individual intrigues were rife within and without the army; though the Mahomedans very frequently breathed a spirit of fanatic ferocity against the British, yet all their influences could not have drawn our native army from its allegiance, if it had not been already penetrated by that unfortunate belief about the cartridges. Nor would such an ill-feeling have so speedily arisen, nor would it have produced such a desperate disaffection, if the army had not been in an unsound and unsatisfactory state for some years past. That this state of things actually existed can now be ascertained from the natives themselves. At the time it would have been extremely difficult to discover as much from them, owing to their extraordinary reticence on matters which they fear to reveal. It is only by attentive observation, by study of their character and their conduct, and by the collating of their casual remarks, that their real opinions and feelings on such subjects can be discerned. It were needless to allude to the several causes which brought about this condition. There is however one essential and original cause which cannot be too prominently mentioned, nor too attentively considered. This cause was, that the sepoys were imbued with a sense of their own strength and of our weakness; and that our system consequently placed in their way temptations which encouraged them to revolt. They were, as they themselves said in their own phrase, the right arm, the hands and feet, of the British Government. Their strength consisted in their great numbers; in their unexampled power of combination from their being one vast brotherhood, with common fatherland, language, religion, caste, and associations; and their possession of most of our magazines, many of our forts, and all our treasuries, while our weakness consisted in the paucity of European troops. Moreover, while the native regiments were kept up to their full strength, while our already overgrown native army was being gradually increased, it so happened that we had not been so weak for many years past in European troops as we were in 1837. Some regiments had been subtracted from our complement during the Russian war; two regiments were in Russia. Those regiments we had were numerically weak; some corps had not received any fresh drafts for two years. These and all the other weak points of our system were patent to a native army, having many intelligent men in its ranks, employed promiscuously from Calcutta to Peshawar, and consequently well acquainted with our military arrangements. In short, it was a sense of overwhelming power acting upon men exasperated by a fancied wrong that led the Bengal army to mutiny. In the face of this grand motive cause for the mutiny existing in the army, why need we look abroad for foreign causes?

14. The real causes of the outbreak having been discussed, I am now to advert to certain circumstances which are sometimes said to be causes, but which in the Chief Commissioner’s judgment were probably not so.

15. In the first place, with reference to conspiracies, which have been so frequently adduced as proximate causes of the outbreak, I am to state that, in the Chief Commissioner’s belief, there was not any conspiracy in the army irrespective of the cartridge affair, and no really organised conspiracy even in respect of that. The sepoys had corresponded in order to unite in refusing the cartridges; they had probably engaged to stand by one another in resistance to the supposed oppression; and being a fraternity with hopes, fears, prejudices, feelings, all in common, they all felt that such an engagement would be acted up to by the whole body. No doubt the course of affairs at Meerut precipitated the outbreak, and it is vain to speculate as to what could have been designed if that outbreak had been postponed. But it seems certain that no regular rising had up to that time been planned. A mass of sepoys corre-pend-ence has been inspected, the common talk of the mutineers in Delhi has been reported, the records of the palace have been ransacked, and yet no trace of any such detailed plan has been found. To show how little the course to be followed had been pre-arranged at the time of the Meerut outbreak, one or two significant circumstances may be cited. The well-known moonshee, Mohun Lal, who was at Delhi, stated that some men of the 3d Light Cavalry told him that when the regiment broke out at Meerut they had scarcely left the cantonments when they held a council of war as to what should be done next. The general voice at first was for taking refuge in Rohilcund, but one of the men pointed out that Delhi was the proper place to make for. There, he said, were the magazine and the treasury; there the strong fortifications; there a large city population; there the King for a fitting instrument; and there, above all, an important point without European troops. This account of what took place on that occasion was corroborated by minute and extensive inquiries made by Brigadier General Chambrlain after the fall of Delhi. Again, it is ascertained from Mr. Ford, magistrate of Goorogon, that a large party of the 3d Cavalry troopers actually fled through Delhi onward to the Goorogon district on the very next day after the outbreak, and that ten men of this party, and about 20 of the horses, were seized by the magistrate. At the same time there is no doubt that the troops at Delhi were prepared for the occurrence of an outbreak at Meerut, and were fully resolved to stand by their comrades.

16. It was when the native army at large saw the immense success of the Meerut and Delhi mutineers, and the disasters of the British in the first instance, that they resolved to convert what had been a combination against supposed oppression into a struggle for empire and for a general military domination. The sepoys had the command of all the public treasuries; no attempt was made to secure the treasure at out-stations; the temptation to plunder was too great for the virtue even of our best disposed regiments; each corps acquired great wealth as it mutinied; as regiment after regiment fell away the power of resistance on the part of the Government lessened; in short, so manifold were the induc-ments, so certain the spread of infection, so powerful the effect of example, that no man acquainted with India could fail to see that such a mutiny and rebellion, unless trampled out at once, unless quenched in the blood of the soldiers who first revolted, must extend everywhere like wildfire.

17. Next, I am to state that Sir John Lawrence does not believe that there was any previous conspiracy, Mahomedan or other, extending first through the influential classes in the country, and then to the native army. If there were such a thing, how comes it that no trace has been discovered in this part of India, in every quarter where any such conspiracy must have been hatched? How can it be reasonably explained, why none of those who have adhered to our cause were acquainted with such a conspiracy? The number of those who were with us in Hindooostan may have been small, as compared with the number of those who were against us; but still the number of our adherents was considerable. Of these, many remained true to us under all trials; others again died fighting on our side, yet not one of these has ever been able to speak of any general conspiracy previous to the outbreak. Again, none of the mutineers and rebels who are paid for their guilt the forfeit of their lives ever confessed in their last moments a knowledge of any such conspiracy, though they knew that any revelations on this subject would have saved them from death. Again, many papers of various kinds have come to hand, revealing important secrets, implicating many persons, jeopardising many lives, yet in all these there has been no allusion to such a conspiracy. In all his inquiries the Chief Commissioner has never heard a word from a native mouth, nor seen anything in any native document, that could convey even the impression that any general plot had existed.

18. Furthermore, the Chief Commissioner considers that the conduct of the people generally negatives the supposition of a general conspiracy. If the people had conspired with the army, why was not the first outbreak immediately followed by a general insurrection? If there was concert and premeditation, then why did not the population obey the first signals of revolt, such remarkable and encouraging signals as they were? Why did not all Hindooostan rebel directly that Delhi had fallen to the mutineers, when the English there had been massacred, when the troops had raised the bad characters of the city, and with their aid had seized the treasure, magazines, and fortifications; when the King’s sons, courtiers, and retainers had joined, and when the King himself had consented to head the movement? Why had not the population everywhere taken advantage immediately of our weakness? Our power in a large portion of Hindooostan was temporarily paralyzed. Our means were small; and those means we had were so placed as not to be capable of being at once brought to bear against the insurgents. And the Meerut force did nothing. The fact is, that at first our enemies were not prepared to profit by such unforeseen and tremendous events. It was not till afterwards that the Mahomedans of Hindooostan perceived that the re-establishment of the throne of Delhi, the gradual rising of the Mahomedan population, and the losses of the British at so many stations, presented an opportunity when they might again strive for empire with some prospect of success. The fact that afterwards in many districts the people threw off or ignored our authority, and that many individuals, and some classes openly rose against us, will by no means prove a preconcerted conspiracy, but, on the contrary, will admit of much explanation. In no case did popular tumult precede the military outbreak; but invariably where it occurred at all, it ensued upon a mutiny, like cause following effect. The population generally were passive at first. Then as it appeared that the British were being swept off the face of the land, every village began to follow its own course. In most districts there was of course more or less of misconduct. But through the whole time the people, even in the worst districts, never embarrassed us half as much as they would have done had they been rebels at heart. Large masses of people were coerced by the mutineers into insurrection, if insurrection it could be called; where, again, the mutineers were beaten and expelled, the country rapidly settled down to peace and order. Wherever our officers were able to hold their own, the people remained wholly or partially tranquil; when British rule ceased, utter disorder necessarily followed. And certainly the common belief in Hindooostan was, that the British dominion had been extinguished. Furthermore, it is to be remembered that in India, as indeed in almost every other country, there exists a discontented class ready for any change, in the hope of its improving their condition. Moreover, in India especially, there are tribes tribes by nature predatory, who before our rule subsisted on plunder and rapine. These were subdued more than half a century ago by our arms and our policy. But the characteristics of those people survive in their descendants. The existing generation cling to the predatory traditions of their forefathers. They long for a return of the days of misrule—the good old times, when those might take who had the power, and those might keep who could. Most of them had indeed never seen a shot fired, and, living under the shadow of a strong Government, had become unwarlike. But when our power became eclipsed and our prestige dimmed, the old instinct, the innate love of plunder revived, and the strong began to prey upon the weak. Then, again, a considerable section of the people, and especially the Mahomedans, are fanatical. This fanaticism, loosed from the bands of half a century, became a powerful engine against us. Whatever may be the intrinsic merits of our rule, the people of India can never forget that we are an alien race, in respect of colour, religion, habits, sympathies; while we, on the other hand, practically forgetting this, and wrapping ourselves up in our pride, self-reliance, and feeling of superiority, neglect the most ordinary precautions for our own security, and throw off even the slightest restraints on our freedom of action, though our very safety may depend upon such precautions.

19. The preceding observations convey, in the Chief Commissioner's judgment, a fair idea of the condition of the people after the outbreak in the Delhi territory, the Doab, of the Ganges and the Jumna, and Rohilkund. In Oude, however, the case was different; there the population had been long inured to danger and warfare; their martial pride had been fostered by constant success in resistance to their own rulers, and by the vast numbers employed in foreign military service under the British. They had always lived free from civil restraint, and they had never felt the weight of our military power. After the province was annexed, we had not at all a strong military position. We were virtually attempting to hold the province by troops drawn from itself; we had but one European regiment, and some European artillery, while we had upwards of 11,000 indigenous troops, and while we had no European troops ready at hand in adjacent provinces. Yet, notwithstanding all this, we did, while acting with the best intentions, carry out some measures which had the effect of irritating various influential classes. As a counterpoise to such disaffection, we might have produced contentment and loyalty among other classes; but our tenure of dominion had been too short to effect this when the outbreak burst upon us. When the influential classes, whom our policy had provoked, found that the native army were ripe for revolt, they added fuel to a rising fire; and when the crisis arrived, mutiny was immediately followed by insurrection. Had we been able at once to march European or other reliable troops into Oude in sufficient numbers, we might even then have beaten down opposition. But this we could not do; and many months passed away. During that interval our enemies consolidated their power, and even those most friendly to our rule, were from sheer necessity, driven to swell the ranks of our opponents.

20. It may be that the Supreme Government have received information from other parts of India; but the foregoing conclusions regarding the absence of any conspiracy, and the general conduct of the people, are based upon Sir John Lawrence's knowledge and experience of the countries from the Jumna to the borders of Afghanistan, a tract of full 100,000 square miles, with a population of 30,000,000, and comprising the very centre and focus of rebellion; the place of all others where such a conspiracy, if it had existed at all, would have been most likely to be discovered.

21. It will be seen that in the Deputy Judge Advocate General's summing up at the trial much stress is laid on the overtures made by the King to the Shah of Persia; but, as already mentioned, nothing was elicited at the trial to show that these referred to a revolt either of the Bengal army or the people of Hindostan. The physician Ahsun Oollah declares, that these communications were indeed reasonable; that the King was dissatisfied chiefly because he was not allowed to set aside his eldest son in the succession to the title; and that he had an idea of obtaining help from Persia and from Oude, to which latter Court also he dispatched an emissary; but the physician adds, that although the subversion of the British Government was mentioned in these despatches, yet a revolt of the sepoy army was never referred to as a means of accomplishing this. During the Persian war there is reason to know that intrigues were carried on between the Courts of Persia and Delhi; but it were hardly reasonable to suppose that if the Shah had really intended to give the King of Delhi any aid, or had even believed that a violent attempt would be made to subvert the British power in India, he would have made peace with us just at the critical time of our fortunes, thereby releasing, for the succour of India, the troops which would otherwise be locked up in Persia. Again, if the Shah had really been cognizant of such an attempt, would he not have sent his emissaries to Peshawar and into the Punjab? Had he done this, some signs of intrigue would have certainly been perceptible, but none whatever were discovered; in fact, all that we have learnt regarding the intrigues of the King and his party show that he did not look to any conspiracy or combination in India itself, but rather to foreign aid from beyond the frontier, from Persia or from Russia. Indeed, the notion developed are generally so absurd as to show that these intrigues were destitute of any reasonable plan, and were conceived by persons in a great measure ignorant of the subject.

22. The Chief Commissioner’s opinions and conclusions on this important subject have now been stated without reserve. The terrible experience of Hindostan during 1857 must ever be applicable to all other provinces of the empire; it should command attention in the Punjab especially. The Chief Commissioner has every reason to speak well of the Punjabee troops, and indeed it would be difficult to praise too highly their services during the present war; they have resisted sore temptations, and undergone severe trials. Nevertheless, there was a time when it seemed doubtful what course they would ultimately adopt; and the Chief Commissioner fully believes that, had we failed to take Delhi last autumn, even their fidelity would not have remained proof against the bad example around them. At that juncture the Chief Commissioner himself could not avoid apprehending the day when, besides the British soldiers, there would be no man on our side. That such a day did not arrive is due only, in the Chief Commissioner’s eyes, to the infinite mercy of the Almighty. The misfortunes and calamities which we experienced in Afghanistan in 1842 were renewed and surpassed in Hindostan during 1857. The issue has been less disastrous, because in the last instance the country was less strong, the people less formidable, and our resources less distant; but, above all, because the Almighty Disposer of Events, though apparently determined to humble, had not resolved to destroy us. Many thoughtful and experienced men now in India believe that we have been extricated from destruction only by a series of miracles. It is no exaggeration to affirm, that in many instances the mutineers acted as if a curse rested on their cause. Had a single leader of ability risen amongst them, may, had they followed any other course but the infatuated course which they actually did pursue in many instances, we must have been lost beyond redemption; but such a destruction was not decreed; it was a struggle between Christianity and civilisation on the one side and barbarism and heathenism on the other. That we escaped from destruction, and even obtained success, can be accounted for in no other way than by attributing it all to the operation of the Divine Will. And now having been preserved by Providence thus far victorious, it urgently behoves us to strive to gain a right understanding of the real circumstances which brought on this crisis. If we can but acquire this, then there is hope that we may profit by a knowledge of the past, and in future avoid those errors which had well nigh led to our ruin.

23. In conclusion, I am to submit the Chief Commissioner’s recommendation in regard to the future disposal of the prisoner Muhummud Bahadur Shah, ex-King of Delhi. The Chief Commissioner suggests, then, that the said prisoner be transported beyond the seas as a felon, and be kept in some island or settlement, where he will be entirely isolated from all other Mahommedans. As regards the prisoner’s wife, Zemun Muhal, and his son, Juwan Bukht, no charges having been exhibited against them, and the latter being only 17 years of age, but they both having been present at Delhi, the Chief Commissioner suggests that they be allowed the option of accompanying the prisoner to his place of transportation; and that in the event of their declining to do so, they be confined as State prisoners somewhere in the Lower Provinces of the Bengal Presidency.

24. While forwarding these proceedings, I am to state that the Chief Commissioner commends to the favourable consideration of the Supreme Government the able exertions of Major J. F. Harriott, of 3d Light Cavalry, the Deputy Judge TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

Judge Advocate General, in conducting this protracted trial. The Chief Commissioner also desires to bring to notice the valuable services of Mr James Murphy, Collector of Customs, who acted as interpreter to the Court. This gentleman, unaided by any moonshee, translated all the numerous and difficult documents adduced at the trial; he also read the originals before the Court, and conducted the examination of the native witnesses. The translations are believed to be exceedingly faithful; and the circumstance that he was able to dispense with native assistance in the work, ensured secrecy and other advantages, and evinced his eminent attainments as an Oordoo and Persian scholar. The Chief Commissioner, I am to add, contemplates shortly proposing some reward in behalf of this meritorious officer.

The charges are read and entered as follows:—

CHARGES.

1st. For that he, being a pensioner of the British Government in India, did, at Delhi, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, encourage, aid, and abet Muhammad Bakht Khan, subadar of the regiment of Artillery, and divers others, native commissioned officers and soldiers unknown, of the East India Company’s army, in the crimes of mutiny and rebellion against the State.

2nd. For having at Delhi, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, encouraged, aided, and abetted Mirza Moghal, his own son, a subject of the British Government in India, and others unknown, inhabitants of Delhi, and of the North-west provinces of India, also subjects of the said British Government, to rebel and wage war against the State.

3rd. For that he, being a subject of the British Government in India, and not regarding the duty of his allegiance, did, at Delhi, on the 11th May 1857, or thereabouts, as a false traitor against the State, proclaim and declare himself the reigning king and sovereign of India, and did then and there traitorously seize and take unlawful possession of the city of Delhi, and did moreover, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, as such false traitor aforesaid, treasonably conspire, consult, and agree with Mirza Moghal, his own son, and with Muhammad Bakht Khan, subadar of the regiment of Artillery, and divers other false traitors unknown, to raise, levy, and make insurrection, rebellion, and war against the State, and further to fulfill and perfect his treasonable design of overthrowing and destroying the British Government in India, did assemble armed forces at Delhi, and send them forth to fight and wage war against the said British Government.

4th. For that he, at Delhi, on the 16th of May 1857, or thereabouts, did, within the precincts of the palace at Delhi, feloniously cause, and become accessory to the murder of 49 persons, chiefly women and children of European and mixed European descent; and did moreover, between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, encourage and abet divers soldiers and others in murdering European officers, and other English subjects, including women and children, both by giving and promising such murderers service, advancement, and distinctions; and further, that he issued orders to different native rulers having local authority in India, to slay and murder Christians and English people, wherever and wherever found on their territories; the whole or any part of such conduct being an heinous offence under Act XVI. of 1857 of the Legislative Council in India.

Question.—Muhammad Bahadur Shah, are you “Guilty” or “Not guilty” of the charges preferred against you?
Answer.—Not guilty.

PROSECUTION.

Judge Advocate’s address to the Court:

GENTLEMEN.—Before proceeding further in this case, it may be necessary to mention that evidence will be submitted to you which may not bear strictly on the charges that have just been perused. It is deemed that all the circumstances connected with the late rebellion, even though not in direct relation to the indictment, may be here appropriately recorded; indeed, up to a late date it had been decided, that as the king’s life had been guaranteed, this investigation should not be accompanied by charges at all, or even assume the form of a trial, but should embrace all such matters as the discovered correspondence and other reliable sources of information might indicate.

I know not whether the Court would, under such circumstances, viz., the absence of specific accusation, have been called upon to record an opinion; but feeling that any investigation in reference to the prisoner must be more satisfactory if he himself were a party to it, and had the opportunity of refuting by documentary or other testimony, such allegations as might appear to his detriment, I suggested that it would be better to have these in a specific and tangible shape, so that on such points guilt or innocence might be clearly established. This has been acceded to, and hence the charges that I have just had the honour of perusing; but it must be clearly understood, that the scope of the investigation is not in any way confined by the observance of technicalities, such as belong to a more formal and to a regular trial.

The official letter which I addressed to Major-general Penny, c.b., commanding the division, on the subject of investigating charges against the prisoner, having met with his approval, is now laid before the Court for their information.
No. 59.

Delhi, 5 January 1858.

I have the honour to report, for your information, that having finished the trial of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, I am now prepared to enter on such investigation as may be deemed requisite in reference to the complicity of the ex-King of Delhi in the late rebellion, &c.

To render such investigation satisfactory, it is in my opinion necessary that it should assume the form of a direct trial, viz., that charges should be framed, and the ex-king be called upon to plead to them.

I do not perceive how, under other circumstances, any result can be arrived at as to the ex-king’s guilt or innocence that will not be open to the objection of being one-sided and unjust.

If a verdict be sought on any points that may come under investigation, it is surely desirable that both sides of the case should be heard and equally considered. Such a verdict, whether one of conviction or acquittal, will have the stamp of authority, and stand a final and decisive record, either in favour of or against the prisoner. I beg then to suggest that this course be adopted, as the only means of coming to a conclusion satisfactory to the Court, the prisoner, and the public. Should I obtain your concurrence for so doing, I will at once draw up charges on which the ex-king can be arraigned, and proceed on his trial with the forms usual in such cases. Awaiting your instructions,

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

Deputy Judge Advocate-general.

Commanding Meerut Division, Delhi.

I fully concur in the opinions expressed by the Deputy Judge Advocate-general.

Commanding Delhi Field Force.

This letter having been forwarded to Mr. Saunders, Officiating Commissioner at Delhi, it was decided that the suggestions in it should be acted on; and the charges have been framed, and this trial commenced accordingly; but still, that part of the original intention to enter into a full and complete investigation of all points in reference to the rebellion has not been abandoned, and I have mentioned this circumstance to account for the introduction of matter that might otherwise appear extraneous, and to prepare the Court for the reception of it. Having finished this preliminary statement, I will say a few words on the nature of the pending trial, and the proof likely to be brought in support of the indictment.

The trial, whether it be considered in reference to the once exalted rank of the prisoner, to the position which his birth and descent still give him in a political point of view, to the magnitude of the crimes imputed to him, or to his connexion with events which will for ever remain recorded in the pages of history, must be of no ordinary interest. The trial, indeed, will be an unusual one, for, under all circumstances, it will close with the verdict; but still that verdict will be looked for by thousands with feelings such as are seldom awakened by the proceedings of a court of criminal jurisdiction.

The following extracts from a letter, No. 19, of the 26th November 1857, addressed by C. B. Saunders, esquire, Officiating Commissioner at Delhi, to Major-general Penny, c.b., commanding the Delhi Field Force, will explain the circumstance of the Court being restricted to a verdict, and that it is owing to Major-general Wilson having guaranteed the prisoner his life, that sentence, even in case of conviction, has been barred.

The letter of Mr. Saunders is written under instructions from Sir John Lawrence, Chief Commissioner of the Panjub, and the extracts from it are as follows:

“’I have at the same time to inform you, that the life of the ex-king having been guaranteed to him by Captain Hodson, acting under instructions from Major-general Wilson, it will not be in the competency of the Military Commission to pass any sentence on him, even should a conviction be the result of their inquiries.”

“I have the honour to forward such documentary evidence in reference to this case as I have been able to obtain, and shall be at all times ready to give you any assistance in my power in furthering the object in view, by procuring the attendance of witnesses, &c.”

“’I have had the vernacular documents very carefully translated by Mr. James Murphy, Deputy Collector of Customs at Delhi, who is an excellent linguist, and can, if you approve, place his services at your disposal for employment as an interpreter.”

The documentary evidence is of great extent, and to render it as intelligible as possible, I have arranged it under five different heads; viz. First, miscellaneous papers. Second, those which refer to a loan. Third, those which refer to the pay of the soldierly. Fourth, relating to all military matters; and, Fifth, those which relate to murders committed, and which bear special reference to the fourth charge. A very great number of these documents are supposed to have orders on them written by the prisoner himself, and evidence to this point will be called; the genuineness of the other papers will be established in such manner as, under the circumstances of the case may be found possible; but some, I fear, will have to be presented to you without direct proof of having come from those to whom they are attributed. In such cases the Court will bear in mind that a full investigation is the great desideratum, and that such cannot be perfected, if evidence, credible in itself, be rejected merely because some unimportant formula cannot be complied with. They will recollect the difficulties as to proof which must ever attach to documents not in the handwriting of those who are the authors of them, and who, at the present moment, have weighty reasons for declining to acknowledge anything that may connect them with the prisoner under trial. The oral testimony I need not dilate on. I shall endeavour to procure it from the most reliable sources; but it must still be borne in mind, that almost every native that I can possibly bring before this Court as an evidence will have some interest in giving his narrative a colouring as favourable to himself and to the circumstances which he relates as may be consistent with those broad and acknowledged facts of the mutiny and rebellion which are already known to us all. I shall now commence with the documentary evidence, and bring forward my first witness in proof of the handwriting of the prisoner, and of others who may have taken part in it.

EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE THE COURT APPOINTED

F. J. Harriott, Major,
Deputy Judge Advocate-General and Government Prosecutor.

First Witness.—Alser Ulla Khan, late Physician to the ex-King, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by the Judge Advocate.—Papers under the head Miscellaneous, numbered 2, 3, 4, 13, 14, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 27, 30, 33, 39, 40, 41, 43, 44, 48, 50, 52, 53, 54, are shown to witness, who declares that the orders written at the head of each are in the handwriting of the prisoner. Also the following are shown to witness, Nos. 6, 15, 18, 25, 26, 31, 32, 35, 36, and 45, who recognises the special cypher as being affixed by the prisoner's own hand. Papers Nos. 5, 16, 29, 34, and 38 are shown to witness, and he declares that the writing in all of them is that of Mukund Lal, who was special secretary to the prisoner, and that the seals on three of them, viz., Nos. 5, 16, and 34, are impressions from the King's state seals. Papers Nos. 12, 23, 28, 37, 42, 46, 47, 51, and 55 are shown to witness, who does not recognise the handwriting in any of them, but says the seal on No. 23 is that of Mirza Moghal, the commander-in-chief; on No. 37 the impressions of the seals of the chief police officer, and of the Chief Court of Justice of Delhi; on No. 42 there are the impressions of the office seal of the police station of Bunderpore, and of the King's own secretarial; on 46, the seal is an impression of that of Mirza Moghal. He does not recognise anything in reference to the other numbers. Papers Nos. 1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 17, and 49 are shown to witness. He recognises the seals on all these eight papers as impressions from the special seal engraved with the King's cypher, and with the exception of the writing in paper No. 10, he recognises that on all the others as that of Mukund Lal, the prisoner's special secretary. No. 56 is shown to witness; he recognises it as the handwriting of Mukund Lal, and as bearing the King's own state seal.

The Judge Advocate now peruses the translations of the above papers down to No. 36, which are entered as follows:—

"Papers arranged under the Head of Miscellaneous."

ORDER under the Seal engraved in the King's Special Cypher, dated 14th May 1857.

To the Special Slave Muhammad Ali Beg, Subordinate Collector of Land Revenue of the Southern Division of the District.

Be it known to you. You are directed immediately on receipt of this order to proceed to the royal presence, and to bring with you the revenue you have collected. You are directed further, to make complete arrangements for the preservation of order throughout the limits of your jurisdiction. You will consider these orders imperative.

No. 2.

PETITION from Moulaei Muhammad Zohur Ali, Police Officer of Najaf Garh, dated 18th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That the orders of the royal missive have been fully explained to all the Thakurs,* Chowdaries,† Kanunkees;‡ and Patwaries;§ of this township of Najaf Garh, and the best arrangements have been established. Further, that, agreeably to your Majesty's injunctions, steps are being taken to collect horsemen and footmen; and it is explained to them that their allowances will be paid from the revenue of this division of the district. Your slave's assurances on this point, however, will not be believed till some Ghazees,¶ recently engaged shall have arrived. As regards Nagli Kakrowla, Duchasoo-Kalan, and other adjacent villages, your slave has to represent that, unrestrained by the dread of consequences, and bent on all sorts of excesses, the inhabitants have commenced plundering travellers. Two petitions regarding the conduct of these lawless disturbers of the peace have already been submitted, and I am now in hopes that some royal prince, of reputation and capacity, may be deputed, with a sufficient force of cavalry, infantry, and Ghazees, to settle the portion of the country constituting your petitioner's jurisdiction, your slave will then point out these lawless villagers, and will be able for the future to preserve order and prevent crime. If delay or indolence is allowed to occur, many lives, it is to be feared, will be sacrificed. Some of the establishment at this station were very much straitened in pecuniary means, and had no choice but to go away. If with kind consideration, therefore, some funds are granted, a portion will be given to the men here referred to, and horsemen and footmen will be entertained to preserve order. But your Majesty is the lord and master.¶ This petition is forwarded to your Majesty by the hands of the cartmen who were recently subjected to lawless treatment. I would beg that your Majesty's orders may be sent by these men. (Prayers for the King's prosperity.) Signed and sealed, the Slave Muhammad Zohur Ali, Police Officer of Najaf Garh.

Autograph order by the King, in pencil.

Mirza Moghal will quickly send a regiment of infantry, with its officers, to Najaf Garh.

No. 3.

PETITION of Captain Dildar Ali Khan, dated 23rd May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That the guard which had been stationed for the protection of your slave's house, having been withdrawn within the last four or five days, ill-conducted characters of the city have been going, in mobs, to plunder it. It is in this house that your slave's wife and children reside, and he therefore prays that a guard may be stationed to protect it. (Prayers for the King's prosperity.) Petition of the home-born slave, Captain Dildar Ali Khan.

Autograph order of the King, in pencil.

Mirza Moghal will station a guard, from the 20th Regiment Native Infantry, at the petitioner's house.

No. 4.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That we, slaves, who are nurtured by your salt, leave our families at our homes, and are, agreeably to your Majesty's orders, daily engaged in the magazine from morning till night. The disorders and disturbances prevailing in the city being beyond all limits, we present ourselves at the royal threshold, and pray that orders under your Majesty's seal may be issued to all the police officers that they maintain efficient arrangements in the several jurisdictions, for the protection of the houses of the magazine servants; moreover, your slaves residing in the Khalassay lines, which are situated in the Nigambooth police section, as well as the rest of the inhabitants, wearied of their lives, by the excessive oppression they are suffering, pray that the present police officer may be transferred to some station outside the city, so that your petitioner may obtain rest and quiet. Petition of the slave, Rajab Ali, jemadar of the Delhi magazine.

Order under the King's special Cypher, in pencil, in Autograph, dated 18th June 1857.
To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ul-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur! Learn, that yesterday, an order was passed, under our own special signature, on a petition from the inhabitants of the old fort, prohibiting acts of devastation against the petitioners, and that this petition was then sent to you. It is surprising that, up to the present time, no arrangement should have been made, and that you should not have given effect to the prohibition by sending out some cavalry. It is the business of the army to protect, and not to desolate and plunder. The officers of the army will, therefore, immediately restrain their men from the commission of these improprieties; and further, as the intelligence of the approach of the enemies' troops was false, these lawless soldiery should not now be kept in the old fort, but, on the contrary, entrenchments should be constructed for them at the distance of five or six miles, and they should be stationed there so that our subjects may obtain immunity from the hardships complained of; and that, at the same time, a barrier may be raised against the approach of the enemies' troops. You will immediately take steps to arrange this matter, and will allow no neglect to occur in reference to it. Be assured of our kindness.

Joint Petition of Chand Khan and Ghulab Khan, on behalf of themselves and other Residents of Jysinghpur and Shahganj, otherwise known as Paharganj; dated 19th June 1857.
To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That whereas in these days of auspicious prospects, we poor residents of Jysinghpur and Shahganj, otherwise known as Paharganj, and of other places, forming a community, pray, our time under your royal and light-dispensing prestige in freedom from all grievances. Whereas this township of Paharganj has always borne your royal name,* and whereas frequently the troops of the state, emerging from the Ajmir Gate, visit Paharganj, and oppressing the shopkeepers, forcibly take away their wares without the payment of prices, and also entering the dwelling-houses of the destitute and indigent, forcibly carry away all such articles, as beds, woods, vessels, &c., that they can lay hands on, and wound with fire-arms and swords those who may supplicate their forbearance. Weakened by this oppression from the army, we are reduced to the necessity of petitioning your august presence, that from regard to justice, as well as from kind consideration for our condition, the officers of the army may be ordered to explain to, and enjoin on their men that they desist from oppressing us and the other poor residents of Paharganj. (Prayers for the King's prosperity.) Petition of the lowest of servants, Chand Khan and Ghulab Khan.

Mirza Moghal will adopt such measures against these devastators as will compel them to desist from plundering, so that our subjects may not be aggrieved or oppressed.

SIR,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. LEARN,—That orders have, day after day, been issued to the officers of the cavalry to vacate the garden, and they have till now done nothing but make excuses and promises. Definite orders are therefore now issued to the intent that you, our son, will summon the officers and will tell them that if they consider themselves the servants of the State, they will not go to the batteries to-morrow, but will leave the garden and remove their quarters to Kecur's house, situated under the palace, where there is abundance of accommodation and ample shelter of trees. What they urge in reply you will submit for our consideration.

No. 18.

ORDER under the Autograph Cypher of the King, in Pencil, dated 27th June 1857.

To Mirza Moghal and Mirza Khair Sultan.

Sirs,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur, and Mirza Khair Sultan Bahadur. LEARN,—That your petition regarding the proceedings of four or five ill-conducted men, who assuming, as a disguise, the appearance and dress of soldiers of the native infantry of the Company, have gone about plundering the inhabitants of the city, and have now left for the country, and representing the detriment to the Government which must ensue in consequence, and further requesting permission to take measures for suppressing such practices, and for capturing the men alluded to, has been perused. It is a matter of some surprise that from the lawless doings of but four or five men so much plunder and devastation in the city and so much ruination of the people generally should result; and that, on their capture alone the establishment of order should be expected to depend; for not a day has elapsed since the arrival of the army and its taking up quarters in the city, that petitions from the townsmen have not been submitted representing the excesses committed by numerous infantry sepoys, about whom there could be no suspicion of disguise, and that orders have not been issued day after day to you, our sons, to take measures, with the aid of a military force, to suppress these disorders. Considering all this, it seems now altogether unlikely that order can be secured while the army remains in the city. However, you, our sons, are nevertheless directed to send to our glorious presence, some one able to recognise the vagabonds alluded to, that he may be sent, accompanied by horsemen and footmen of our own royal levies, with a mandate to the chief police officer of the city and his subordinates, to arrest and forward without delay to our presence, those whom he may point out, and if any villany or instigation to plunder shall be proved against those who may be thus apprehended, they will receive punishments adequate to their guilt. But you, our sons, are directed to take all proper steps to prevent the men of the army from plundering and desecrating the city. In every case of an offence of these kinds being proved, or where a man may be found in the private residence of any of the inhabitants, the officers will award punishment to the offender, so that these evils may be suppressed. Be assured of our kindness.

Petition of Baldeo, Farmer of Ferozabad; dated 28th June 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That owing to the unsettled state of the times, and in consequence of the city gates being kept closed, your slave has stored the produce of his winter crop of grain of the agricultural year 1264, on the premises of a relation in the old fort. The officers of the regiment stationed there now oppose its removal, and your slave is pressed for payment of his rent for the year referred to, by his landlord Syad Abdullah Mafeedara*. Your slave therefore trusts that an order, under your royal signature, may be sent to the officers stationed in the old fort, directing them not to oppose the removal of the grain to the city, so that your slave may sell it and pay his rent. Petition of Syad Abdullah, Priest at the Shrine of Hazrat Sheikh Muhammad Chisti, dated 29th June 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Previous to this, your petitioner submitted a petition, representing that some of the cultivators of the rent free village of Ferozabad Khadir had not paid their rents on account of the winter crop of the agricultural year 1264, and he requested that aid might be granted to enforce payment. Up to that time no damage had been sustained by the crops, which the cultivators could urge as a reason for delay. Now, however, the whole of the autumnal crop of sugar cane, chunree, &c., of the agricultural year 1265 has been totally devastated, and more than this, the very implements of agriculture, such as ploughs, the wood-work on wells, have been all carried away in plunder by the soldiers. Under these circumstances, certainly the rents cannot be realised; and as the revenue of this village has been assigned as an endowment to support the expenses of the almshouse under your petitioner’s management, he depends on your royal kindness and consideration, and trusts such arrangements will be adopted, as will insure that no soldier shall cause loss to the agriculturists of the said village. A petition from the cultivators also is being submitted. Petition of the Anchorite Syad Abdullah, son of Syad Shah Sabur Ali Chisti. Official Seal of the Shrine.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Your Majesty,—Paying, agreeably to your Majesty’s orders, 1,200 rupees into the Royal Treasury, we obtained a document under your special signature, assuring us that we should for the future have full immunity from all vexation and annoyance at the hands of the functionaries of the State, the Princes Royal of illustrious descent, the soldiers of the army, and all others. Notwithstanding all this, however, some troopers, bent upon plunder, still come daily to your slave’s house in the name of the princes, and wish to take our lives, or carry us prisoners. Left without other choice, we have been sitting concealed for the last three or four days, and our servants and retainers being subjected to every grievance and hardship, have not known what to do. Denied ingress and egress to and from our house we have been rendered houseless as it were, and the privacy of our families has been completely ruined. If the princes royal, delegated to protect the subjects of the State and the poor, begin themselves to plunder and oppress, where then can there be any safety for the subject? From your Majesty’s goodness, clemency and justice, equal to Nowshera’s, we expect that a written order will be addressed to each of the royal princes of illustrious ancestry, namely, his Highness the Lord of the World, Mirza Muhammad Moghal Bahadur, Mirza Khair Muhammad Sultan Bahadur, Mirza Muhammad Abulbakr Bahadur, Mirza Muhammad Abdullah Bahadur and others, to the effect that for the future no soldier of the cavalry or infantry be permitted to go to your slave's house and commit acts of aggression there; and that the military guard at present stationed there be removed, because lawless characters of the city take advantage of the guard being changed to plunder your slave's property. We further expect from your Majesty's kindness and consideration that a guard of militia from the chief police station of the city may be placed at our house, that we and our servants may not be hindered in going in and out, and may be protected from the ill-conducted characters of the city; and we pray, moreover, that a written order may be sent to the chief police officer, that none of the ill-conducted characters above alluded to may be permitted to get up disturbances with your petitioners. Several tenements, forming a square, some of brick or stone, and some of mud or unbaked bricks, and belonging to ascetics, are situated in the locality. The aforesaid soldiers had before dug out and taken away the doors and door-frames. They are now destroying the roofs. As your Majesty dispenses justice to all, your petitioner's case depends on your Majesty's goodness and favour, and prays that the entire demolition of these houses by the soldiers may be prevented, so that what remains of them may be saved from their aggressive hands. Respectfully showeth,—THAT Mirza Abulbaker Sahib has lately been in the habit, with uncontrolled license and recklessness, of visiting for evil purposes the house of Princess Farkhunda Zaman, situated in Bahram Khan's Teraha (your petitioner's house being in the same division of the city), and of indulging in the practice of all those acts which may be expected to result from drunkenness. to leave; but the key of the street-gate, accidentally being with the watchman, and he not coming immediately, the mirza was delayed. Upon this, the mirza being in a hurry, drew his pistol and fired it at your slave, who happened at the time to be sitting at his door with some friends. Your slave kept silent, although no pretext had been afforded for this violence; but the mirza, nevertheless, gave unlimited hand to his tongue, and thought to enter your slave's house, and to plunder and to carry off all the property it contained. Your slave, however, shut the door, fixed on the chain, and got inside. The mirza had intended to kill your slave, and it was with this object he discharged his pistol at him; but as some little portion of your slave's life remained uncompleted, the shot did not take effect. After the door had been closed, the mirza drew his sword, and made several attacks upon it, and moreover directed his servants to throw stones at different places over the walls, and at the doors. He further gave orders, that the artillery, infantry, and cavalry, should plunder the house and slaughter the inmates. The watchman stationed at the Faiz Bazaar arriving, the mirza forcibly threw him on the ground, and it was probable that he would have severed the watchman's head from his body. This did not occur; but the mirza so bruised the watchman's back and head with blows, as to leave him half dead. Moreover, the mirza kept striking with his drawn sword in all directions, and very much injured the door with successive shots from muskets, and so distributed the infantry soldiers in the bazaar, at the same time ordering the troopers to plunder and murder, that many of the people passing in the streets were hit by the bullets. The assistant to the chief police officer of the city was hit by one. All the goods and chattels, likewise, which happened to be in the yard in front of the house were carried off in plunder, and the mirza, then destroying the door, left a guard, and went away. In this disturbance, your slave has had a foretaste of the day of judgment. Whatever has passed, now depending on your Majesty's kindness, I trust that full punishment may be awarded. Otherwise, to-morrow is not far from to-day, and the said Lord of the World, Mirza Abulbakr, bent on evil purposes, will certainly come with cannons, muskets, and swords, and will carry out his designs, and what we helpless subjects will have suffered will be something astounding. The troops which have now arrived, have encamped near your slave’s houses, which are contiguous to the ice-pits opposite the Turkoman Gate, and your slaves are, in consequence, exposed to great annoyances and ruination; the very timbers of the roofs of their houses having been carried away. Many of the inhabitants, considering their lives in danger, have deserted the place, but your slave has remained, solely because the ice used by your Majesty’s butler‡ is supplied from his ice-pits. Your Majesty desires the fostering care and protection of all God’s creatures. Amir-ud-dowlah, Zia-ul-Mulk, Muhammad Mahmud Khan Bahadur, Muzaffar Jang, our own special servant, worthy of kindness and protection, the object of our favours.

Know! The petition of that special servant containing full particulars respecting the disturbed state of all the parganahs of that zillah from the acts of plunderers and rascals, and the method adopted for putting a stop to the same by entertaining as many footmen and horsemen as possible, and calling to mind the heculeary services of that faithful one towards our royal house, and requesting that our royal attention may devolve upon that zillah as of old, has been perused, and all has become known. Of a truth the forefathers of that special servant have ever been the objects of favours to former emperors; but that especial servant has always been looked upon by us with particular favour, inasmuch as you left me no service which was becoming, unperformed for Mirza Shah-Rukh, deceased, the light of our royal eyes. (This is an allusion to civilities rendered on a shooting expedition, which Mirza Shah-Rukh, the emperor’s son, made some 10 or 12 ago years to Rohilkhand.)

Therefore you are entitled to our especial kindness.

If you, in addition to your former good acts, render still more efficient service, then will the royal favour be increased, and your request that the arrangement of the whole zillah be made over to you shall be complied with. Until a perfect sumud be issued, you are to keep in deposit the revenues of the district, after paying the troops and the revenue officers, and you are to remit the balance to us.

With reference to the large amount of treasure, chattels, and horses, which came into your hands after the flight of the British officers, you must send them at once with an account current by the hands of Mathura Das* and two of the royal sowers, in order that the real value of your professions may be at once tested, and that you may obtain promotion.

Your slave, with much difficulty, found the mule after five days’ search, when Jawahar Baksh restored it after taking 11 rupees for doing so. delinquent, took him before Mirza Sultan Beg, Doctor of the 11th Regiment of Infantry. The doctor placed your slave in arrest, and said the mule was his, and that your slave should either bring the animal or remain a prisoner. Fearing that his life was in jeopardy, your slave made the mule over, when the 11 rupees he had formerly given were returned. The truth is, that about five months ago, your slave purchased the animal in question from Ramzan Khan, Risaldar, of the 5th Troop, 8th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, who is a resident of Delhi. Your slave prays that with fostering concern for the protection of the poor, Your Majesty will inquire of the above-named Risaldar, and of four or five other officers of his regiment, so that your slave may obtain justice, and ever pray for your Majesty’s prosperity. It was necessary, and has therefore been submitted. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Karim Baksh, alias Nathanae, claimant for justice, proprietor of the mule.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. Learn! Formerly some troopers took up quarters in the Hayat-Bakshi and Mahbub gardens, and owing to the injury these gardens suffered from the troopers staying in them, they were made to remove, agreeably to our royal orders. But now near 200 soldiers of the 54th Regiment Native Infantry, and a doctor, with his family, have located themselves there, and thus, unless they remove the causes of damage to the said gardens, will continue as before; moreover, our royal cartage frequently condescends to go in that direction and much inconvenience is felt on such occasions. You, our son, are therefore directed to speak to the officers of the Court on this matter, and to have these soldiers and the native doctor removed from the gardens. In doing this, you will secure our extreme divine approbation. Be assured of our Kindness.

It being half-past two o’clock, and the prisoner requiring an adjournment, the Court adjourns accordingly until 11 A.M. to-morrow.

SECOND DAY’S PROCEEDINGS.

Thursday, January 28th, 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 A.M., in the Hall of Special Audience, in the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of yesterday.
The president, members, interpreter, and deputy-judge advocate-general are all present.
The prisoner is brought into Court. Ahsan Ulla Khan is called into Court, and reminded of his former affirmation.
The prisoner now requests that a lawyer of the name of Ghulam Abbas, may be allowed to attend and assist him in Court. To this the Court accede, and Ghulam Abbas takes his seat in Court accordingly.
The interpreter now peruses the originals of the papers, the translations of which were read by the judge-advocate yesterday, and it is explained to the prisoner’s assistant what evidence in respect to each paper was given by the witness yesterday. The interpreter having perused Persian originals down to No. 36, the judge-advocate resumes reading the English translations down to No. 36, which are entered as follows:

Petition of Mubarak Shah, Chief Police Officer of the City, on the reverse of the above Order, dated 24 July 1857.

To the King, &c.
The explanation called for by this order is submitted in a separate petition, which is enclosed. Petition of the slave, Mubarak Shah, chief police officer of the city of Delhi.

Enclosure referred to in the above Petition of Syed Muhammad Shah, dated 24th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!
Respectfully sheweth,—That your Majesty’s order, to the effect that five prisoners dispatched from the chief police office of the city had reached, and that of these, the files of the cases of Gumani and Rahum Ulla are in the office of the royal court of justice, but that those of Harsukh, Ghulam Ali and Khuda Baksh have not been found, and therefore, directing that if any receipt of the Royal Court is forthcoming in this office it be submitted; and further enjoining that in future cases, the usual form of committal, the plaintiff, and the proofs of guilt be sent with the prisoners, has been received. Your exalted Highness, the particulars are these: Harsukh was apprehended by the subordinate police officer of Allahabad, on suspicion of obtaining his livelihood by evil practices, and was sent to this police station as a character of this sort; but as there was no plaintiff, and no stolen property was found in his possession, no papers were prepared in his case. As regards Ghulam Ali, (so called through a clerical error, his correct name being Ghulam Muhammad), the particulars are these: he was sent to me from the Chandni Chowk police station, with a written statement of the case against him, to wit, that the following stolen property had been found in his possession:—
Brass vessels, the property of Jammaji Cashmuri.
Sheep and goatkin shoes belonging to Muhammad Ali, seller of shoes; clothes and other things, the property of Ghulam Haidar Khan.

In the investigation at the chief police station, the charge having been conclusively proved by the written statement of the subordinate police officer, by the testimony of witnesses, and by Ghulam Ali’s own confession, the property was made over to the claimants on their several receipts, their ownership being first fully ascertained, and a full statement of the case, together with the papers received from the subordinate police station, was forwarded to your Majesty. In reference to the prisoner in this case, it was specifically mentioned in my report, that he had formerly been a watchman in the division of the city known as the Turkoman, but that the clerk of the Chandni Chowk police-office had, on his own authority, removed him to the front of the Ashraf-ka-Kuttra. Perhaps the clerk approved of these services of the watchman. Accordingly, a copy of this report is present in the book of copies, amongst the petition from the police station for the 15th July 1857. With advertence to the case of Khuda Baksh, on a reference to the diary of this police station, it is ascertained from the entry for the 17th July 1857, that Khuda Baksh, trooper, apprehended the prisoner as one engaged in evil practices for a livelihood, and brought him to this station, affirming that he, the trooper, had lent a pistol to one Nunnah, son of Kaulia Khan, mendicant, that the prisoner had forcibly taken the pistol from Nunnah, and ran off with it; and that from that day he had been in hiding, and had only now been seized. This was the trooper’s charge, and it was confirmed by the testimony of Kaulia Khan, mendicant. The report in this case was forwarded to the presence of his highness the Commander-in-Chief, Sahib Mirza Mogulul Bahadur, in view to orders being issued, but none have as yet been received. It is further submitted that search having been made in the office of the police station, no receipt of the Royal Court, on account of the papers in this case, could be found. The reason is, that frequently, when papers are forwarded, no receipts are given from the Royal Court, and it is accordingly a matter which cannot be helped. Such as the particulars were, they are submitted. For the future great care will be observed, and when a prisoner is forwarded, the form of committal, the plaintiff, and the proofs will be sent at the same time. All the subordinate police officers of the city have been made acquainted with the orders on this subject, and will carefully conform to them. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, Syed Mubarak Shah, chief police officer of the city of Delhi, attested with the seal of the chief police office of the seat of Government, “Shahjahanabad.”

ROYAL MANIFESTO or Proclamation, without Signature, Cypher, or Seal, probably an Office Copy, kept for record, dated 23rd July 1857.

To all the Inhabitants of the Town of Rohtak.

PROCLAMATION is made. That one man is not to stretch out the hand of violence against another, and that all are to continue in full subjection to the authority of the principal landholders, who are known to be the well wishers of the State. Civil establishments and a sufficient military force will very soon be sent to make all necessary arrangements. Anxious concern for the welfare and comfort of his subjects is cherished by his Majesty; but all such as shall be guilty of acts of turbulence or disobedience against lawful authority, will be most severely punished. This proclamation is therefore issued for public information.

PETITION of Mirza Moghal, dated 24th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—THAT fourteen middle-sized horses, with some magazine cart drivers, have this day been seized and brought to your slave by some infantry soldiers. The drivers assert that these horses are their own private property. The truth of this statement can (not?) be ascertained without an investigation. Your petitioner submits that, if he be so directed, he will, without entering into any inquiry, attach these horses to the Royal Artillery. Some of them are equal to the draught of guns, but others, being small and weak, are totally unfit; or if such is the royal pleasure, these horses can for the present be kept here, till all the forms of a regular investigation shall have been gone through, when they can be sent to the royal presence. Let instructions, agreeable to your Majesty's pleasure, be issued under the royal signature, so that in accordance with them steps may be taken. It was necessary, and has been submitted. Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din.

PETITION of Mubarak Shah, Chief Police Officer of the City, dated 25th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—THAT information was brought at noon to-day that a great crowd of infantry soldiers had assembled and broken into the house of Alopri Prashad and Kurnall, Khatries, on the pretext of searching for Europeans. I immediately dispatched my assistant to prevent excess on the part of misconducted characters, and being still anxious, sent such other aid as appeared necessary. The assistant returned and reported that the officer of the regiment had sent him away, saying that he would preserve order, and that there was, accordingly, no necessity for the assistant's presence. I have just now heard that no suspicious property or European was found in this search; but, nevertheless, the owners of the house cannot but have suffered some loss, the extent of which it would be difficult to determine. I have further heard that the soldiers have taken away the two owners of the house, and have placed them in arrest. The proceedings in this case were altogether at variance with the usage according to which search should be conducted, and by such proceedings the subjects are aggrieved and oppressed. In those cases in which the statements of the informers are deemed worthy of credit, no oppression or disgrace is inflicted on any person who is not guilty, if search is made after the established usage by four or five trustworthy men in company with the police establishment. I submit the petition for your Majesty's prerogative to settle this matter. It was necessary, and has therefore been submitted. (Prayers for the King's prosperity.) Petition of the slave Syad Mubarak Shah Khan, chief police officer. Seal of "the chief police office of the seat of the imperial government, Shahjahanabad."

Mirza Moghal will quickly send the officers of the regiment, and will have these poor innocent men released from arrest.

Petition of Saligram, Proprietor of Bullock Train.—No date.

Date of King’s order, 28th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World.

Respectfully showeth.—That your slave’s bullock train, for passengers and parcels, had been long running between Delhi and Muttra. When the revolt of the troops occurred, all his arrangements were deranged, and one of his waggons, which had been coming from Muttra, remained at the Arab Serai, in consequence of the disturbed state of the country. The people in whose charge the waggons was left now decline being responsible for its safety, and importune your slave to have it brought away to Delhi. Your slave depends on your Majesty’s kindness and consideration, therefore, to allow him the aid of a peon to have the waggons brought in in safety from the Arab Serai, and your slave will ever pray for your Majesty’s life and prosperity. It was necessary, and has therefore been submitted. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Saligram, proprietor of bullock train, subject of the King, resident of the Dariba. No date.

PETITION of Dundia Khan, Farmer of the Old Fort.—No date.

Date of final Order, 30th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That your petitioner is a poor farmer, and has of old been your Majesty’s subject. That he has claims against his tenants on account of the autumnal crop, but cannot obtain payment from them, and that when he applies to them, they put him off with promises from day to day. He therefore depends on your Majesty’s favour and goodness, and expects that an order will be issued to the officers stationed in the Old Fort, to have the money which is due to your slave, realised for him, so that he may pay his instalment of the Government revenue. Your petitioner further submits, that if he is authorised, he will collect the revenue of the hamlets connected with the Old Fort, agreeably to the papers of the village accountants, and will bring it to the royal presence, for now it is being uselessly lost. In its reaching the royal treasury, your slave will have obtained distinction. Furthermore, your petitioner represents, that when he speaks to the farmers to carry on their sowings and the agricultural operations, in view to provide for future production, they do not heed his injunctions, and that, if some do take steps to cultivate their lands, the people of the army, camel-drivers, &c., destroy their cultivation. Seeing them, cow-herds, &c., let their cattle loose into the fields, and when your slave remonstrates, the said camel-drivers come forward to resist him forcibly. Your slave’s preservation or ruin is in your Majesty’s hands, and he therefore prays that five troopers, and a petty officer of cavalry, may be assigned to aid and protect him, so that his agricultural operations may be put in train of commencement, and when they have been sufficiently advanced, after a month or fifteen days, if your Majesty wishes, the troopers may be recalled. Otherwise, how shall we farmers be able either to pay the Government revenue for the present season, or support ourselves and our families, for we shall have been utterly ruined, and rendered houseless? However, your Majesty is master. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, of old nourished by his Majesty’s salt, Dundia Khan, farmer, resident of the Old Fort. No date.

PETITION of Mirza Moghal and Mirza Khair Sultan, dated 6th August 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That owing to the suspension of all remittances to and from the country, there is at present a great scarcity of money, and unless a mint for coinage is set in operation, it will soon not be procurable. We, therefore, pray that your divine Majesty’s orders may be issued, that we slaves, making all necessary arrangements connected with the measure, may have the operations of coinage commenced. We, therefore, submit enclosed herein, a petition from a person offering to contract for the mint, and from your Majesty’s kindness and favour, we expect that this tender of contract will be accepted. It was necessary, and we have therefore submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slaves, Mirza Muhammad Zohur-ud-din, and Mirza Muhammad Khair Sultan.

Address from Mirza Moghal, on the part of the King, attested with the official seal of the Commander-in-Chief, rambling and unconnected, and from the style, appearing to have been written from the King's dictation, dated 9th August 1857.

To the Officers of the Bulluntair (Volunteer) Paltan, 36th* Regiment of Native Infantry.

The orders of the royal presence are to the following effect.

In the first place, it is to be observed that setting aside all regard for my own life even, I have done all in my power to satisfy and please the soldiery in every matter. The reason was, I had assured the army that I should regard them as my own children. The petulance of one's own child has to be borne with, and so I have borne with yours, indulging you in all your wishes. But it is to be deplored that you have, notwithstanding, shown no concern for my life, and have had no consideration for my old age. It is incumbent on you now to reflect on my infirmities, and the changes of my health is momentarily undergoing. The care of my health was altogether in the hands of the physician, Ahsan Ulla Khan, who kept himself constantly informed of the changes it underwent. Now there is none to care for me but God, while the changes in my health are such as may not be imagined. All the soldiers and officers ought now, therefore, to gratify me in this matter, as I have even indulged them in every wish of theirs, and should remove the guard at present over the physician, and release him from arrest, so that he may be at liberty to come and go, whenever he may think it necessary to examine my pulse. Moreover, if my enemy is instigating you, you should not heed his insinuations. Should any one insinuate suspicions against the physician, you should tell him to intercept some letter attested with his seal; and bring it to you, that you may have proof that he is an enemy, and that you will then yourselves punish him. Furthermore, the property that was plundered from the physician's house belonged to the king. It is therefore proper that it should be traced and collected, and should be sent to our presence, and that the people, through whose instigation it was plundered, should be adequately punished, agreeable to the decision of the Court. If you are not disposed to comply with these requests, let me be conveyed in safety to the Khwaja Sahib. I shall there sit and employ myself in the occupation of a Mujawir, and, if this even is acceded not to, I shall proclaim every concern, and go away. Let those who think they can detain me, attempt to do so. Not having been killed by the hands of English, I shall be killed by you. Further, the oppression that is at present being inflicted on the people, is not inflicted on them; it is inflicted on me. It is incumbent on you all to take measures to prevent it. Or let me have your answer, and I shall swallow a diamond and kill myself. Moreover, on the plunder of the physician's house, a small box containing our seal was carried away. No paper, of a date subsequent to the 7th August 1857, bearing the impression of that seal, will be valid.

It has been clearly ascertained that the wounding and slaughter of the risaldar and the troopers who were with him cannot be ascribed to anything but the said risaldar's own misconduct, and you, our special slave, are therefore directed to return to your residence, and restoring your ancient demesne, in all confidence and assurance to its former order and tranquility, to continue obedient to our royal orders. In the wonderful changes now occurring the will of God has come to pass. Under all circumstances preserve unanimity amongst yourselves, and stay in the quarter of Lucknow called Aminabad; and pass your time in confidence of safety and protection from the present dangers. Please the ever-revered God, the present calamities and confusion will now, with His Divine help, speedily come to an end. The appearances of order are already becoming manifest, and you will soon see reason for entire confidence reflected in the mirror of your own minds. Continue to cherish perfect assurance. That they must first obtain a fatwa, and a bywasta, and that, if these shall sanction the slaughter, they can slay the prisoners alluded to; but that your Majesty will not give an order on the subject contrary to the laws of the Prophet; and that if they do not approve of this, they may first wreak their rage on your own royal person. I trust that your Majesty’s orders, agreeably to the suggestions above submitted, will be issued to the officers of the army in a tone of decision. to spend the remainder of our life in the service and worship of God. It is, therefore, our fixed resolve in our present griefs and sorrows shortly to go in the garb of an ascetic pilgrim first, with all the members of the exalted house of Taimur, to the shrine of his reverence Khwaja Kubl-ad-din, of eminent holiness, and arriving there, and making arrangements for all the necessities of the journey, to proceed thence to the holy tabernacles (Mecca and Medina). May God increase the veneration and respect in which they are held! for this perishable world affords no certain dependence. You, our slave, are therefore written to, to come quickly to our royal presence, with those of your retainers and attached followers in whom you may have the fullest confidence, in whatever way your doing so may be practicable, and accompanying us to the said shrine, have all the property and chattels of the whole of the members of the royal family conveyed thither in safety. Moreover, such cumbersome property as the princes will not at the present time be able to take with them, they will leave in their several residences in the palace; and for the protection of this, in concert with the royal servants, you will station some of your soldiers; and leaving also an adequate force for a few days at the said shrine, to protect our divine person till our departure for the holy house of God (Mecca), you will return to your fief (or freehold). In acting thus, you will secure our entire divine approval and pleasure, and your fame will likewise spread through mankind, that you, the selected from amongst all well-wishers, have at a time like the present, from regard for old relations (of sovereign and subject), rendered services such as none others of our oldest protectors had the grace (or virtue) to afford. Accordingly, whatever haste you are able to make in this matter will be extremely proper and necessary. Be assured of our kindness. Secondly. There is no carriage whatever (procurable) here. Be sure, therefore, to bring 400 or 500 carts, and 500 or 600 camels with you. No date.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, 29 January 1858.

The Court reassembled this day at 11 a.m. in the hall of special audience, in the palace at Delhi. The president, members, interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate General are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court, and Ghulam Abbas attends as his assistant.

The interpreter now peruses in the original, Persian papers, the translation of which was read by the Judge Advocate yesterday, viz., down to No. 56.

Ghulam Abbas is now duly affirmed as a witness.

EXAMINED BY JUDGE ADVOCATE.

Question.—Where were you on the morning of the 11th of May 1857, when the mutinous troops came from Meerut?

Answer.—I was at the entrance of this very hall of special audience.

Question.—Relate all that you witnessed on that occasion.

Answer.—At about eight o'clock in the morning, I heard of the arrival of five or six troopers of the Company's cavalry, and of their being in front of the girt dome over the king's special sitting-room. They cried out clamorously, upon which the king told his immediate attendants to ascertain who were making such noise. One of them went to the balcony, and had some conversation with the troopers, and then returned with his report to the king. I don't know what report he made, but the king came out into the apartment adjoining the sitting-room above-mentioned, and called for me. The king then told me that these troopers said they had revolted, and come from Meerut, resolved on fighting for their faith, and killing the Europeans, and directed me to go immediately to Captain Douglas, tell him the matter, and request him to make suitable arrangements; the king at the same time directed one of the household attendants to close the gate under the sitting-room. I went to Captain Douglas as ordered, and explained my message. Captain Douglas immediately accompanied me, saying, he would see what the matter was. He arrived at this hall of audience, and the king immediately came out and joined him; the king at this time was strong enough to walk about without other help than that of a stick. The king asked Captain Douglas if he knew what was the matter, and how it was that this force had come, and suggested that he should at once take steps or make any arrangements that might be necessary for the occasion. Ahsan Ulla Khan and I were both present at this time. Captain Douglas requested that the gate under the king's sitting-room might be opened, that he might go and speak to the troopers. The king said that he would not allow him to do so, as they were murderers, and might kill him also. Captain Douglas persuaded the king to have the gate opened; but the king gave no consent, and laid hold of Captain Douglas' hand, saying, "I won't let you go." Ahsan Ulla Khan at the same time took hold of Captain Douglas' other hand, saying, "If you want to see and speak to these men, you can do both and the other from the balcony." Upon this, Captain Douglas came up to the railing between the king's apartments and the hall of special audience, overlooking the spot where the troopers were collected. I accompanied Captain Douglas to the railing, and there perceived about 30 or 40 of the troopers below.
below. Some had their swords drawn, others had pistols and carbines in their hands; more were coming from the direction of the bridge, accompanied by men on foot, apparently groom, with bundles on their heads. Captain Douglas said to the troopers, “Don’t come here; these are the private apartments of the ladies of the palace; your standing opposite them is a disrespect to the king.” On this they gradually, one by one, went off in the direction of the Rajghat Gate; and when they had all gone, Captain Douglas went again to the king, who said, “Have the gates of the palace, as well as those of the city, closed immediately, lest these men should get in.” Captain Douglas assured the king that the gates were already secured, to fear, that it was his duty to attend to the business, and that he would go and make arrangements immediately. On this, both the king and Captain Douglas went each to their own apartments, and I and Ahsan Ulla Khan, the physician, came and sat down in this hall of special audience. After remaining about half an hour, we both went to Ahsan Ulla Khan’s room in the palace. We had been there an hour when a servant of Captain Douglas came running with a message requiring the attendance of Ahsan Ila Khan. At the request of the latter I went up with him. The man who had come for us said that Captain Douglas was in the key-room; but, on nearing the place, we heard that he had gone back to his own quarters. It was at this time I noticed there was a good deal of smoke rising from the direction of the quarter of the city known as the Darya-Ganj, and heard from some of the passers-by that it was caused by the troops having fired the bungalows. We thus went on to Captain Douglas’ quarters over the Lahore Gate of the Palace. On reaching his room I noticed that Captain Douglas was in the third apartment, and we met Mr. Simon Fraser in the intermediate one. Ahsan Ulla Khan went on to see Captain Douglas, and I returned with Mr. Fraser, agreeably to his request, who directed me to go and ask the king for two guns and some of his infantry to protect Captain Douglas’ residence. I and Mr. Fraser came down the stairs accompanied by another gentleman who was with him, Mr. Fraser had a sawed-off gun in his hand, and this other gentleman, whose name I don’t know, had a pistol in one hand, and a gun in the other. Mr. Fraser desired me to go quickly; he himself was on his way to the king, but I preceded him. On my reaching the king’s apartments, I sent word to him, when he came out of his sitting-room, and I explained to him Mr. Fraser’s request. The king immediately gave orders to the men in attendance to take two guns and all the troops that were present, with such of the Captain Douglas’ quarters, to Captain Ahsan Ulla Khan arrived and told the king that Captain Douglas had requested that two palanquins might be sent for the two ladies that were staying with him, and that they might be brought away and concealed in the apartments of the ladies of the Palace. The king told Ahsan Ulla Khan to make arrangements, and he instructed the servants in attendance to take two palanquins, of horses, and every precaution to properly conduct the proper conveyance of the proper conveyance of the ladies’ persons, without the garden, so as to avoid the crowd of mutinous troops, who had by this time got into the Palace. The king, while these orders were being given, stood inside urging their completion, Ahsan Ulla Khan standing by him. After a short time, one of the servants who had gone for the palanquins, returned and reported that they had been sent, and very soon after, the attendant who had been sent with the palanquins returned, and said that Mr. Fraser had been killed. This was shortly before 10 o’clock. Ahsan Ulla Khan on this route other men to see if the report was correct, and to get particulars of what was occurring, and to ascertain how and where Captain Douglas was. These men came back very soon after, and stated, that not only Mr. Fraser, but Captain Douglas and the ladies, and the other Europeans residing with them, had all been killed. Hearing this, the king went inside, and Ahsan Ulla Khan and I came into the hall of special audience in perfect bewilderment as to what should be done. Immediately after this two companions of infantry were on guard at the Palace gates, followed by the mutinous cavalry, that had come from Meerut, marched into the court-yard of the hall of special audience, and commenced firing their muskets, carbines, and pistols in the air, at the same time making a great clamour. The king hearing the noise, came out, and standing at the door of the hall of special audience, told his immediate attendants to direct the troops to discontinue the noise they were making, and to call the native officers forward, that they might explain the object of such proceedings. On this the noise was quelled, and the officers of the cavalry came forward, mounted as they were, and explained that they had been required to bite cartridges, the use of which deprive both Hindus and Mahomedans of their religion, as the cartridges were greased with beef and pork fat, that they accordingly killed the Europeans at Meerut, and had come to claim his protection. The king replied, “I did not call for you, you have acted very wickedly.” On this about one or two hundred of the mutinous infantry, the infantry from Meerut, having also arrived by this time, ascended the steps, and came into the hall, saying, “that unless you, the king, join us, we are all dead men, and we must in that case just do what we can for ourselves.” The king then seated himself in a chair, and the soldiery, officers and all, came forward one by one, bowed their heads before him, asking him to place his hand on them, and each withdrew, saying what came into his mind. When the crowd became excessive, I retired. The tumult and noise at this time was very great, all speaking loudly together. After a little while the king went to his own apartments, and the troopers, picketing their horses in the court-yard, the mutinous troops took up their quarters and spread their bedding in the hall of audience, and placed guards all about the palace. After this I went to Hekim Ahsan Ulla Khan’s rooms, and lay down, Ahsan Ulla Khan’s rooms, and lay down, About four o’clock, in the evening, I heard a heavy explosion, and going out, observed a great column of dust in the direction of the magazine. The people about the said that the mutineers had attacked the magazine; but I afterwards learnt that the British officers in the place had blown it up. About five o'clock I heard that the mutineers had seized some Europeans, men, women, and children, to the number of about seven or eight, and that they had applied to the king for permission to kill them; but that the king had asked the sepoys to give their prisoners over to him, and that he would have them kept in safe custody. They accordingly made them over on the condition that the guards should be furnished from among themselves. Upon this the king had them confined in some apartment, and issued orders that their food should be regularly supplied at his expense. After sunset I was intending to go to my house in the city, when on reaching the court-yard of the hall of public audience, I found a great concourse of troops there also, and learnt that they were from the Delhi regiments. After this I mounted my horse, and went home. On coming to the palace next morning, I learned that the guns, the reports of which I had heard at 10 or 11 o'clock the night before, had been fired by the Delhi native battery as a salute to the king. I can't say whether it was on his assuming the reins of government or any other cause. I then came on to the hall of special audience, where I met Ahsan Ullah Khan, whom I asked if the king had decided on any measure to put down the disturbance. He told me that the king had dispatched a letter on the subject by camel express, to the Lieutenant-governor at Agra, and about 15 days after I again asked him if any answer had been received. He said that the camel rider had returned without a receipt or reply, but said he had delivered the letter, and was told a reply would be sent afterwards. After the occurrence of the first day I discontinued my regular attendance at the palace, coming only occasionally once in three or four days, and even on those occasions I merely paid my respects to the king, and then went away, and accordingly can't speak to after events.

Question.—Did you hear who had murdered Mr. Fraser? Was it done by servants of the king, or by whom?

Answer.—At the time, it was said the soldiers had risen, and Mr. Fraser had been killed in the riot; but, subsequently I heard that he had been cut down by a man who was a lapidary by trade, and had a shop in the bazaar immediately under Captain Douglas's residence. I am unable to say what the man's name was, or where he is now.

Question.—When the king put his hand on the heads of the native officers and soldiers, what was the meaning of his doing so? Was it in acceptance of their services?

Answer.—It was equivalent to an acceptance of their allegiance and services; but I cannot say what the king's intentions were at the time.

Question.—When was it that the king's authority was publicly proclaimed in Delhi, or when was it that it was generally known that he had assumed the reins of government here?

Answer.—I do not know of any regular proclamation having been made, though such may have been done without my hearing of it; but the very day of the outbreak the king's authority was established.

Question.—Was it on this account that the guns were fired as a salute to him?

Answer.—I don't know; all I heard was, that the artillery men fired it, as a salute on the occasion of their coming under the king's rule.

Question.—You know how many guns were fired on this occasion?

Answer.—The usual royal salute, I think, about 21 guns.

Question.—On what day did the king hold his first public court?

Answer.—He commenced holding his court daily from the very day of the outbreak; the audience he gave the troopers may be considered as the first court he held.

Question.—Prior to the outbreak, had you been a frequent inmate and associate of the king and his family?

Answer.—I used to come to the palace daily, and interchange of all communications between the agent of the Lieutenant-governor and the king was carried on by me. I was a servant of the king's, but had been appointed through the influence of the late Sir Theophilus Metcalfe.

Question.—Had you any opportunities of knowing of what passed in the palace, or the general subjects of conversation that were indulged in prior to the outbreak?

Answer.—I had such opportunities, but I never heard anything in particular.

Question.—Were you so much in the confidence of the king, or of those about him, as to be likely to be entrusted with any secrets or measures that they might wish to conceal from the British Government?

Answer.—I was not among those who would be likely to be consulted, or informed of such matters; but Ahsan Ulla Khan and Kuwaja Mahbubali Khan were more likely to be entrusted.

FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

FOURTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Saturday, 30 January 1868.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 A.M., in the hall of special audience in the palace at Delhi. The President, members, Interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-General are all present.

The prisoner is brought into court.

Ghumal Abbas, the witness is re-called, and examined on his former affirmation.

EXAMINATION BY JUDGE ADVOCATE.

Question.—Had you before the outbreak any opportunities of becoming acquainted with the prisoner's handwriting?

Answer.—Yes, I used frequently to see his writing, and should be able to recognise it.

Question.—In the papers submitted to the Court, and which purport to bear the autograph writing of the prisoner, and his seal, have you any reason to object on account of their not being genuine?

Answer.—The generality of the papers bear the writing of the king; there may, perhaps, be a doubt about one or two.

Question.—Were you present when any women and children of European descent were murdered in the palace?

Answer.—No, I was not in the palace; but I heard afterwards that some had been murdered.

Question.—Do you know by whom they were so murdered; was it by the soldiery, or by the prisoner's own servants?

Answer.—I can't speak positively on the subject; but when I came into the palace two or three days after, I asked Ahsan Ulla Khan why he did not use his influence to stop the slaughter. He said he did all he could; but the mutineers would not be restrained.

Question.—Did Ahsan Ulla Khan give you to understand that he was present on the occasion?

Answer.—No, he didn't distinctly mention whether he was present or not.

Question.—How many Europeans were murdered on that occasion?

Answer.—I did not know the number before, and it is just possible that I may have heard it, and may have forgotten; but I now learn, that is within the last ten or fifteen days, that the number was about 50, including women and children.

Question.—Were these women and children murdered with the prisoner's consent?

Answer.—Yes, I do not know whether one was kept or not; one was kept before the outbreak.

Question.—Was Mirza Moghal, the king's son, appointed the Commander-in-Chief of the rebel army in Delhi, and if so, by whom and when?

Answer.—Mirza Moghal was certainly appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army, and it was generally said that he had been appointed by the king in compliance with the request of the army.

Question.—Previous to the outbreak, had you ever heard of any discontent in the native army?

Answer.—Yes, I did hear that in Calcutta two regiments had mutinied in consequence of having to use greased cartridges, and that they had been disbanded.

Question.—Before the outbreak at Delhi, did you hear that the regiments at this station were in any way dissatisfied?

Answer.—No.

EXAMINED BY COURT.

Question.—Did you at any time after the murder of the Europeans, see either bodies, blood or other traces of such murders having been committed?

Answer.—I saw nothing of the kind.

Question.—Do you know the spot where these women and children were murdered?

Answer.—I heard they were murdered in the first courtyard, as you enter the palace from the Lahore Gate, near the cistern; people about the place mentioned this, but did not point out the exact spot.

Question.—Do you know what became of the bodies?

Answer.—I don't know how they were eventually disposed of; but I heard they were removed in carts.

RE-EXAMINED BY JUDGE ADVOCATE.

Question.—Do you know whether these women and children were imprisoned before being murdered, and if so, where?

Answer.—I heard they were imprisoned, and were kept confined in the king's kitchen, or in an apartment adjoining.

Question.—How many days were they confined?

Answer.—About a week or ten days.

EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE THE COURT APPOINTED

Question.—Who kept the prisoner's state seals during the rebellion?
Answer.—They used to remain in the prisoner's private apartments.

Question.—Was the use of them entirely under the control of the prisoner?
Answer.—The seals were never affixed but with the king's authority.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness resumes his seat as assistant to the prisoner.

The following papers in Persia, under the head Miscellaneous, from No. 57 to 78, having been fully established as genuine before the Court on the trial of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, are now received without further evidence regarding them, and the translations are read and entered as follows:

The papers in the original Persian are also read to the prisoner.

Papers arranged under the head of Miscellaneous.

No. 57.

ORDER from the King, under the State Sval.—No date.

To the special Slave, worthy of favour and kindness, Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

Know! That we have heard that you have appointed a police officer of your own to Bhadrapur; one, however, by name Nazir-ud-din Khan, already stands appointed by the government, and he is now present in Arab Serai. You, our slave, wilt therefore, according to the dictates of your own devotion, dismiss the man you have nominated.

No. 58.

PETITION of Rajah Nahar Singh, of Ballabhgarh. No date.

To the King, Shelter of the World! Dispenser of Justice! &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That, as the state of the road to Delhi was very unsettled, your slave has, according to your Majesty's orders, been engaged, night and day, in instituting the most efficient arrangements. Still, however, the lawless inhabitants of the village of Palt, which adjoins the Ballabhgarh boundary, and which, during the Foujdar's* was attached to this State, have broken out into reckless and lawless violence, and have so taken to highway robbery and plunder, that the whole population is in great distress in consequence, notwithstanding that I, your slave, am bringing them into order little by little, yet still I cannot venture to act to any full extent without your Majesty's orders. If your royal permission is granted, such efficient arrangements will be adopted, that these miscreants and rebels of the said village will not have the daring to continue in their present practices, and the arrangements along the road, from Ballabhgarh to Delhi, will be perfected. Further, I have heard from some persons who had requests to make to me, that it has been represented to your Majesty that the chief of Ballabhgarh has secreted two Englishmen, with their wives and children. God is witness that this is entirely a false and unfounded calumny. How could your slave dare to commit an act of the kind, without your Majesty's wishes and orders? A native, however, who was formerly a Christian, had been twelve years in my service; but I put even him away, fearing your Majesty's displeasure. This man has now discarded Christianity, and embraced the Mahomedan religion, and he is accordingly deserving of mercy and forgiveness. If your Majesty permits it, I shall have him recalled. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the ancient slave and servant, Nahar Singh, chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No. 59.

PETITION of Nahar Singh, Chief of Ballabhgarh. No date.

To the King! Lord of Mankind! Shelter of the World, &c. &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That your Majesty's order directing my attendance at the court as of old, to superintend and direct the police arrangements of the city of Delhi and its environs, accompanied by a second order to give my attention to the protection of the road, and to use measures for the safety of travellers, supplies, &c. has been received. I declare it solemnly as the truth, that, considering myself exceedingly honoured and exalted in receiving these orders, I offered my thanksgivings, with humble prostrations, in the house of God. May He condescend to accept my midnight prayers, and for ever preserve your Majesty in prosperity and good fortune.

* By this term is meant the time when the Rajah of Bhartpur held his principality under the Mahomedan government, in consideration of certain sources which were assigned to him, and which were called the Foujdaris. Hence it is that the State of Bhartpur and the surrounding districts call themselves Foujdaris, and even when asked their castes, replied that they are Foujdaris.
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

My Lord! although by the influence of your royal auspices, the most complete tranquility exists in this your slave's territory, for that I am night and day engaged making arrangements and maintaining order, still some refractory and turbulent characters, inhabitants of the village of Pali, which adjoins the Ballabhgarh boundary, and the rebels and reckless characters of the town of Palwal likewise, which also is near the boundary, have become so insurrectionary, and have so entirely adopted a course of highway robbery and plunder, that how shall I describe it? Although, from certain prudential considerations of my own, as well as on the request of the revenue and police officers, and registrars of landed propriety rights of the said town, I have made arrangements to some extent, by affording them the aid of some cavalry and infantry; but, without your Majesty's orders, I do not wish to interfere to the degree which is necessary and desirable. I have enlisted new horse and foot levies for the efficient protection of the high road from Ballabhgarh to Delhi, and am night and day occupied in arrangements to maintain order. I am your ancient and hereditary slave, and as I may be ordered so will I act, God willing! I shall shortly realise the honour of presenting myself before your Majesty, after efficient arrangements and tranquility shall have been established, for certainly the existing state of things is disgraceful, and involves the dread of the royal displeasure. It was necessary, and I have therefore submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the home-born slave, Nahar Singh, Chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No 60.

Petition of Ahmad Ali, Confidential Agent of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—THAT on his departure from this, some time ago, agreeably to your Majesty's orders, to attend to the arrangement in his territory, the Rajah left certain necessary articles here, such as clothes, &c., which he has now sent for; I pray, therefore, that a passport may be granted, to the effect that the carts coming from Ballabhgarh are not to be molested by any one, and that when the things are being sent, the soldiers at the Delhi Gate are not to oppose any hindrance. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the menial slave, Ahmad Ali, confidential agent of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Ahmad Ali.

Mirza Moghal will have the pass made out and given.

No 61.

Petition of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 20th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—THAT previously to this I have submitted several petitions, but have not been honoured with a reply to even one. I now again submit that the refractory inhabitants of the village of Pali, &c., have taken to committing highway robbery and plunder in all directions, and are grievously oppressing the populace and subjects. Although I have brought the said village, little by little, into some order, I cannot nevertheless, without your Majesty's orders, presume to act with confidence in any matter. I am engaged, night and day, raising new cavalry and infantry levies. Besides this, my health is frequently affected by the adverse state of the weather. Setting this aside, however, I shall make efficient arrangements and provision against all the refractory and rebellious characters of this district, and will then present myself at your Majesty's court. I have sent Kalandar Khan, Baildar, to the royal presence, with some cavalry and infantry, agreeably to your Majesty's orders; as he is directed so he will act. Petition of the hereditary slave, Rajah Nahar Singh, chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No 62.

Petition of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 21st May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—THAT by your Majesty's order, the protection of the high road to Delhi, and the arrangements of the police station of Biadrapur, had been assigned to your devoted petitioner. Nevertheless, since another police officer has been appointed by your Majesty, I have, agreeably to your orders, dismissed the whole of the establishment of the said police station, and have installed your Majesty's nominee. I had despatched Kalandar Balesh Khan, Baildar, with some cavalry and infantry, agreeably to your Majesty's orders, to assist in the arrangements; but when they arrived at the gates of Delhi, they were prevented entering the city; and the guards told them that they should first give up their arms. Your Majesty knows that a soldier's arms are his decorations and adornment, and his remaining in attendance without them would be improper, as inconsistent with the profession of soldierly. They therefore returned, and have temporarily taken up their residence in the Old Fort. Let an order, therefore, be issued, that these men may come before your royal presence; and devoting their lives, may zealously engage in all necessary and becoming services. I, who am your ancient servant, consider that obeying your commands advances my dignity. I learn from the clerk of the Bhadrapur police office, and submit the same for your information, that the police officer appointed by the Emperor has arrived. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave and ancient servant, Nahar Singh Bahadur, chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No. 63.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 22d May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That your Majesty's orders, with which your slave has been honoured, whether as regards the arrangements for the protection of the highroad from Ballabhgarh to Bhadrapur and then on to the Delhi Gate, or in the village of Pali and towns of Palwal and Fattehpur, and other places, have, by the blessing of God and your Majesty's auspices, been effectually carried out, and police and revenue officers have everywhere been established. The efficiency of your slave's measures and arrangements have become generally known, so much that it must have come to your Majesty's hearing also. Adoration of the World! Some thoughtless characters, enemies and rebels against this State, who have absconded after committing every injury in their power, and who are now amongst those who present themselves at the royal court, are not pleased at hearing of the success of the above arrangements, and desire that disrepute should be made to attach to my good name and exertions; and they even instigate the regular infantry soldiers stationed at the city gates against me and my servants. I fully believe it probable that, in their stupidity, they may even to your Majesty utter sentiments prejudicial to your hereditary slave; but let not their allegations ever be believed; for formerly too it was their practice, from feelings of enmity, to speak disparagingly of your slave; and then, too, their calumnies used not to be heeded in the least. I pray, therefore, that from a regard for proper arrangements, your Majesty will, with due consideration, peremptorily order the regular infantry soldiers at the gates not in any way to object to, disagree with, or hinder the servants of the Ballabhgarh State in any matter whatsoever, otherwise detriment to the arrangements will ensue, to arrangements which have been made for the protection of your subjects solely in conformity with your Majesty's orders. Further, your Majesty is master, and I am your old servant. In carrying out your Majesty's orders, I wish that nothing like the least deficiency should occur; and accordingly the enlistment of cavalry and infantry, to be employed in keeping order, is going on. In a short time hence I shall send some more cavalry and infantry for the police, and other general orders to all in your Majesty's service, which I have, in all circumstances, devoted in heart and soul. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the ancient slave and servant, Nahar Singh Bahadur, chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No. 64.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 24th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That I have had the very great honour to receive your Majesty's letter, intimating the issue of orders to the guards at the gates, prohibiting their interference with the servants of the Ballabhgarh State; granting my cavalry and infantry permission to encamp under the palace windows; and, at the same time, with your wonted kindness, directing my attendance at the royal court. For the very great honour conferred on me by this order, I made my offering of thanks in humble prostrations before God. May God ever preserve, your Majesty in the enjoyment of every blessing.

Adoration of the world! I, your devoted slave, consider obeying your orders my happiness. But, owing to the necessity for arrangements, to put down the rebellious characters of the village of Pali, &c., I have been helpless and unable to appear at the royal presence. But, please God, I shall have much happiness in doing so after the disturbers of the peace of the surrounding country shall have been effectually brought into subjection. My lord, according to my usual custom, I intend to go this Sunday, and according to my usual custom, I intend to take an airing in the Dilkhusha garden. While I was there the new moon of the festival of the Eed appeared, and was about the same time distinctly seen by all the inhabitants of this place. From regard for my obligations, as your home-born slave, I offer my wishes that this good news, full of promise, namely, the festival of the Eed, which is an occasion for rejoicing, may be the forerunner of good fortune and happiness to your Majesty. FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

No. 65.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 25th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That I yesterday submitted a petition connected with the state of affairs, from which every particular must have come to your Majesty’s knowledge. By God’s blessing, and your Majesty’s good fortune, the arrangements up to the Delhi Gate, and in the country around this district, are now perfect. It is necessary, in my opinion, however, to place one police officer, of the lower grade, and 10 soldiers at the Hanuman station, and one police officer and 25 soldiers at Mahrowli. After that, through your royal prestige, the arrangements will be thoroughly complete. If your Majesty is pleased to issue orders to that effect, the proposed arrangements shall be made for both places. (Prayers for the eternal prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the home-born slave, Nahar Singh, Chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of “Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.”

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 27th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World?

Respectfully sheweth,—That I have had the very great honour of receiving your Majesty’s order, directing the suppression and prevention of the crimes of murder and pillage; and my sending 20 horsemen to the police stations of Mundka and Shahdari to preserve order and arrangements there. Feeling myself highly honoured and distinguished, I have offered up my thanks in humble prostrations before God. Adoration of the World! I shall speedily make arrangements to despatch the horsemen, as I am ordered by your Majesty; but, in the meantime, some of my servants are being sent to look after the place, agreeably to your Majesty’s orders. I am unceasingly engaged in arrangements and plans for the prevention of crime; but now the ill-conducted and refractory Gojurs, Mewattees, and other castes, have discovered a more determined spirit of violence, and are daily resolved on making a sudden attack on the town of Farridayab, and even on Ballabhgarh itself. But as the blessing of God, and the influence of your Majesty’s prestige, are both in my favour, I shall certainly make effectual arrangements, and will then shortly realize the honour of waiting on your Majesty, for this is my earnest desire. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the home-born slave, Nahar Singh, chief of Ballabhgarh. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 30th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That some days have now elapsed, that I have not been made acquainted with the continuance of your Majesty’s good health, and I have been anxious in consequence. May God preserve you in prosperity and happiness. From your Majesty’s order to the address of Moulaee Ahmad Ali, I have to-day learned the circumstance of the plunder of the carts at Bhadrupur. I have accordingly, in conformity with your Majesty’s commands, issued stringent injunctions to the police officer at Bhadrupur to search for and trace out the property and the offenders. Please God, the matter will be thoroughly investigated. I have just now sent off 20 more horsemen to your Majesty, to be employed in maintaining order. I mention this for your information. To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That I yesterday sent an answer to your Majesty’s missive, and it must have come under your perusal. Through God’s blessing, and your Majesty’s auspices, there is complete tranquillity in every respect throughout this district to-day. I send five gold mohurs as a congratulatory offering, on account of the festival of the Eed-ul-Fitr. As a mark.

No. 69.

Petition of the Rajah of Ballabghar, dated 31st July 1867.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully shoveth,—That your Majesty is fully aware how entirely my former officials had the most complete authority in every matter, and how unreservedly every business was confided to their care. These men, in their short-sighted cupidity, embezzeled and made away with property worth lack of rupees. When the secret of their misconduct became disclosed, and I took steps to compel them to render their accounts, and to make restitution for the deficiencies, they one and all, upon one plea or another, went off to Delhi, where they are now residing in their respective homes. So little do they dread being brought to account by your Majesty's officers, that they have prepared themselves for further acts of ingratitude, and use their worst endeavours, to the prejudice and injury of all cases connected with this State, which happen to come before your Majesty's government. Thus, for instance, your Majesty having been more than ever graciously disposed towards this slave, these men have succeeded by their false and unfounded representations, in making me the object of your aversion and anger; for they have made you believe that while I am professedly a servant of the State, in heart I am a friend of the English, that I am collecting stores of lead and powder with traitorous designs; and that I have closed the high road to all travellers and traffic. So completely have your Majesty's feelings of gracious kindness been changed for those of anger, displeasure, and resentment, that Ahmad Ali, who was the trusted agent of your distrusted slave, and who remained in attendance at your royal court, feeling himself in utter disgrace, has come away to this place, at the same time that Kalandar Baksh Khan, Raisalder, who had been in attendance according to your Majesty's own orders, has received his dismissal. Your exalted Highness, all that my enemies have alleged to me for my own advantage is lies, which must in the end fail to maim the trust by such conduct as they have been pursuing, to impress your Majesty with a firm belief of their own zeal and devotion, hoping by this means to secure immunity from all question or inquiry on the part of the officers of your Majesty's government, and the quiet and un molested enjoyment of the immense riches they have amassed by their frauds against this State. My ancestors and I have ever been the ancient and hereditary devoted slaves and servant of the exiled dynasty, and have never entertained an idea of disloyalty against you, who dispense mandates to the six cardinal points,* and the seven kingdoms of the world. For unalloyed gratitude and fidelity, I am as silver which has been thoroughly tried. If you test me a hundred times I shall not fail in the test. The proof of this profession and statement is this: Before the present disturbances I was staying at Delhi on some business. If I did not cherish the most heartfelt devotion and fidelity for your Majesty even then, how was it that I made proposals, through the superintendent, Mir Fattah Ali Sahib, that I might be allowed the honour of an interview? If the obligations of fidelity and loyalty were not impressed in their brightest colours on the tablet of my heart, how was it then that this secret and long-cherished wish should have been disclosed, and should have received expression in words? Let my enemies do what they please. If, your ancient slave, shall still, under all circumstances, continue your devoted well-wisher.

“My eyes will not take the impression of any face but yours,
“My mirror will not reflect the countenance of a stranger.”

Moreover, although I, your ancient slave, profess the Hindoo religion, having observed the conduct and behaviour of those who say that God above is supreme, I have remained in subjection to the guidance of the leaders of the Mahomedan faith, in so much that, although from the first existence of the town there had been no Mahomedan mosque either in the fort or outside in the market, I have caused a lofty one for congregational prayers built of stone, to be erected within the fort itself. I have, moreover, had an edgewall, a place set apart exclusively for prayers at the festival of the Eed, built near my garden, called the dilkusha, to encourage and conciliate the Mahomedans. I, your ancient and eternal well-wisher, have ever desired that the Mahomedan faith should be extensively proclaimed. Your Majesty! let your displeasure now be changed for feelings of graciousness, and let me, who am an expectant of your kindness, be, as before, regarded anew with eyes of favour and benevolence, and let not your Majesty give credence to the false allegations and absurd statements of my enemies and adversaries.

“Be watchful against your associates in position,
“For water, though pure by nature, is the rival of the mirror.”

Moreover, in your unbounded favour and graciousness, let orders be issued to the servants of your Majesty's government, to seize the above enemies and inimical characters, and to make them over to me, so that their villains may come to an end, and the cloud of your Majesty’s displeasure and anger may be dispelled; and that I may bring them to an account account for my losses, amounting to lacs of rupees. As regards the petition presented to the Lord Sahib Bahadur by Rustam Ali, a resident of Kirazli, that Gainddah and others, 11 persons, were taking two carts laden with wheat and wheat-meal, as supplies to Delhi, and that the Rajah's police officer seized and sent them to Ballabhgarh, where the freight of the carts were confiscated, I urge that the statements of the petitioner are altogether false, and contrary to facts. The true features of this business, without reserve or exaggeration, are, Gainddah, who is a leader of ill-conducted characters and highway robbers, had, in the first instance, accompanied by some dependents, residents of his own village, plundered the village of Nuglee, in the Bhatpur jubilation, and conveyed the booty to his own and adjoining villages. Subsequently, bent on plunder, they made a raid on the village of Mugrowlee, in the Ballabhgarh jurisdiction. By the merest chance the police and revenue officers of Farrabad happened in their patrolling excursion to come to the Magruli boundary, and saw what was going on, when these plunderers and highway robbers immediately consulted their safety in flight; but the revenue officer, acting with decision and promptitude, seized some of the miscreants, and, having pinned their arms, forwarded them to the criminal court of this place. The file of papers compiled in this case is forthcoming. If, in proof of what is here stated, it be so ordered, the original, or a copy, as may be required, shall be submitted for your Majesty's inspection, when you will be thoroughly informed of all the facts. The case of the buggi and Nabi Bakh Merchant is similar. The particulars of this matter are, that my servants had purchased the buggy which has been attached from a Brahman subadar of the 11th regiment of Native Infantry, and Nabi Bakh Merchant was proceeding in it to Ballabhgarh. So pray your Majesty! certainly inquire into this case. As one or two English letters were found in the buggy, I solemnly swear by God, that I or my servants have no knowledge of them whatever as to who is the writer, who the addressed, or what their purport. It accordingly appears evident that some enemy of this State has had these letters written surreptitiously, by some one acquainted with English, and has had them concealed in the buggy. Let your Majesty certify yourself of the truth of all that is here submitted, by the testimony of the priests at the shrine of Muhammad Shah Nizam-ud-din. May he ever be blessed. I beg I may be honoured with a favourable reply to this petition,

To the King &c. &c.

[After a long preamble of the most fulsome and unmeaning compliments.]

Respectfully showeth,—That blessed and happy is the lot of those who enjoy the bliss of remaining in your Majesty's presence. Although I have not been able to realise this happiness, and am still actually at a distance, but, with a hundred solemn assurances of my good intentions as of old, and with a thousand sincere professions of my fidelity as throughout time immemorial I ever had, I nevertheless feel as though I were amongst those who are immediately near your exalted throne. Humbly and respectfully presenting my congratulations, I send 8 gold mohurs, as an offering of felicitation on account of the festival of the Eid, and trust they will be condescendingly accepted. Prayers (the most extravagant) for the prosperity of the king, and invectives and curses the most rancorous and bitter against his enemies.

Order by the King, without signature, cypher, or seal, dated 9th August 1857.

To the special slave, worthy of kindness and favour! Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

Consider yourself receiving the royal favour, and know that your missive sending a present of 8 gold mohurs as a present of congratulation on the occasion of Eed-i-azha has not removed my displeasure in the least. As it has not been the custom of this court to return such presents, yours has been accepted. It is imperative on you to follow in the path of your father and your grandfather, and from your heart to engage in acts of devotion and zeal. Be assured of our kindness.

Petition of the Rajah of Ballabhgarh, dated 14th August 1857.

To the King! Vicar of God, &c.

Respectfully showeth,—That I have had the very great honour to receive your Majesty's missive, acknowledging the receipt of my congratulatory present, on the occasion of the festival of the Eed. I have considered myself highly honoured and distinguished; but where is the tongue, or where the language with which I could appropriately express my praises and thanks for such eminent condescension and graciousness, and as regards the intimation that the cloud of your Majesty's displeasure has not yet been entirely dispelled, do, my lord, let me urge that I am, as is already well known to you, an old and ancient, true and faithful servant of your Majesty's house; that I am from my heart, every moment and every second, occupied in carrying out your Majesty's orders. There is not a day that my heart forgets to think upon all your kindness; there is not a moment that my tongue does not speak of your great condescension. Pray do, under all circumstances, consider me your slave, as one of the lowliest of your Majesty's servants, and condescend to regard me with the eyes of graciousness and favour, for your Majesty's unbounded kindness and support were in times long gone by always bestowed on the ancestors of me, who am the least of all your servants, and your Majesty's countenance and protection in every variety of way, were ever abundantly conferred on me personally also. Depending on all these former abounding and conspicuous kindnesses, mercies, and favours, I trust that the cloud of displeasure which, owing to the false and unavailing statements of my enemies, has dimmed the mirror of your Majesty's mind, naturally bright as the sun, will now be dispelled and dissipated, and the dust of anger and dissatisfaction, which has from the same cause settled on the edge of your Majesty's disposition towards me, will be washed off and removed. Moreover, my trusted representative at your Majesty's Court has for some time been denied the happiness of presenting himself, and I pray now that he may be directed to attend. I present the same request in reference to the Risaladar of my troop of cavalry. I further pray that I may be favoured with kettle-drums and standards, as a means whereby your Majesty's fame and greatness may be proclaimed to the four quarters, and the six cardinal points of the world, and at the same time the credit and dignity of me, your faithful and devoted standard-bearer, may be advanced amongst all classes. An auspicious desire to wait on your Majesty continues impressed on my heart; but as yet I have been so unfortunate, as not to have been able to realise this heartily cherished purpose, in consequence of the numerous ailments with which I have been afflicted since I came from Delhi, and from which I have not yet obtained complete relief. May your Majesty's victorious and conquering standards always be elevated, and may defeat for ever attend on your enemies. Petition of the slave Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur, chief of Ballabhgarh. Order without signature, cypher, or seal, apparently from Mirza Moghal, dated 16th August 1857.

To the especial Slave, Emblem of Good Intentions, Rajah Nahar Sing, of Ballabhgarh.

Consider yourself honoured. Frequent occasions for verbal instructions occur, and a necessity is then felt for the presence of the trusted representatives of our faithful retainers. It is accordingly necessary and proper that an agent from you, our especial slave, should remain in attendance. You are therefore directed to nominate two of your trusted servants as your agents, and to send them to the royal court, so that whenever verbal orders may be necessary, no difficulty may be experienced. Entertain every confidence, and in sending the agents allow no delay to occur, for with the blessing of God, it is not possible or probable that they can have anything to dread or fear from this court. Consider yourself honoured.
Respectfully sheweth,—That it is well impressed on your Majesty's mind, that your petitioner is, by ancestry, the home-born slave of your illustrious house; and that I your slave, and my ancestors, as I still continue to do, have ever remained in subjection to your Majesty's commands, and have always been engaged in acts of obedience, devotion, and zeal; and I therefore cherish the most anxious desire to present myself at your court. The proof of this statement and profession is, that if I did not consider myself as nurtured and reared by your hands, and if I did not in my heart cherish and preserve the most anxious desire to obtain an interview, knowing what unbounded benefits I should realise, how then was it that during the government of the English, I repeated my petition through Mir Fateh Ali, for permission to appear before your Majesty. When I did so, you were pleased to observe that my heart-felt fidelity and devotion were manifest, but that from prudential considerations, necessary at the time, my attendance in your presence would not be proper, lest some evil might ensue. That your slave has now the misfortune not to realise the happiness of presenting himself at your court, is to be ascribed to two reasons. The first is, that since the day of my return from Delhi, I have been suffering from various bodily complaints and ailments, external and internal. The second reason is, that as my enemies have alienated your Majesty's kindness and good-will from me, by means of their false and calumnious statements, I have been afraid, lest on my going to Delhi, they might devise some plan for my being subjected to indignity and disgrace, and by feeding the fire of your Majesty's wrath, with the oil of falsehood, boldly and audaciously advanced, might raise its flames to twice their present fury. I have, moreover, learned from several quarters that the officers and servants of the State are just now very much estranged in pecuniary means, and that they have accordingly arranged for demanding a contribution and present in money from me, although my income is very limited. Your Majesty, who is thoroughly acquainted with the whole of the affairs and circumstances, public and private, of all your retainers, knows also, that, compared with the States of all the other chieftains, your slave's territory is considerably the smallest, and that its revenue has never been equal to its necessary and unavoidable expenses; but that, on the contrary, the State has always been thousands of rupees in debt. As regards that which had been accumulated by the ancestors of this least of the lowest of your servants, it is to be submitted that the former officials of my government, by embezzlement and fraud, plundered and carried away the whole of that, and emptying my treasury and store-rooms, have abundantly filled their own houses with the money and property they had embezzled from this, they went off to Delhi, where they live at their homes, concocting and propagating every variety of calumny and scandal against my government. Under these circumstances, then, how could I, your slave, whose means are so limited, arrange for a contribution, a present in money, and the expenses of the army? Yes, certainly, if your Majesty's advisers and the servants of your government will, according to the list below, apprehend and make over to me my former faithful and constant officials, who are now residing in Delhi, and who, by their embezzlements, have robbed me of about 11 lacs and 25,000 rupees, half of whatever I may be able to recover from them of their plunder I shall pay into the royal treasury. If, on the other hand, it is not deemed advisable that they should be seized and made over to me, then let your Majesty's servants themselves apprehend them, and recover the claims and demands of this State. Of all the money that may be thus recovered, let them pay such portion as they may think fit into the royal treasury, and let them return the rest to me. The emblem of nobility and greatness, Mir Fateh Ali, condescendingly took the trouble to come here, and by doing so has laid me under obligations as if he had conferred unlimited kindness. He evinced, moreover, a very kind and fatherly interest in my affairs. All the orders which were entrusted to Mir Fateh Ali for verbal communication I have been made acquainted with by him, word for word; as the answers were such as it was not expedient should be put into writing, I have explained them to the Mir Sahib, who will communicate them to your Majesty verbally. A further petition is, that whatever he may urge in behalf of me, who am a slave deserving of your kindly graciousness and favour, may in every respect be accepted and approved of, with that wonted kindness, condescension, support, and benevolence from ancient times. All that was necessary I have submitted for your Majesty's information. May your Majesty's servants ever be cheered by victory and conquest, and may your destitute enemies ever be dispirited and humbled by calamities and oppression.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabghar, dated 1st September 1857.

To the King! Vicar of God! &c. &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That I have had the very great honour to receive your Majesty's missive replying to my petition, intimating your acceptance of my present of a dun horse, and directing me to entertain no fears of oppression from the army. The acceptance of my present has conferred on me the highest distinction. Let your Majesty ever consider me your devoted and ancient slave and servant. If with your unlimited graciousness and favour you will be pleased to bestow the Pali and Palwal sections of the district on me, I shall make the most complete judicial and revenue arrangements there. So complete shall these arrangements be, that every one, high or low, rich or poor, will be satisfied with them, and your Majesty also will graciously view your slave's tact, exertions and pains, with approving favour and kindness. Prayers for the continuance of the King's victories and conquest. Petition of the slave, Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

No. 77.

PETITION of the Rajah of Ballabghar, dated 2d September 1857.

To the King! Vicar of God! &c. &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That I have had the very great honour to receive your Majesty's missive, intimating your acceptance of my present of a dun horse, and directing me to be assured that no one of the army shall commit any act of oppression or grievance against the Ballabghar State. I feel as though I were elevated to the very summit of distinction. The tongue and language are alike altogether at fault, adequately to express thankfulness commensurate with such signal and abounding graciousness and condescension. May God preserve and protect your Majesty, to the end of time, in the performance of similar acts of favour and support! Refuge of royalty! It is a most extraordinary circumstance, that your Majesty has ordered that no one connected with the army shall commit any act of oppression against the Ballabghar State; and to-day, the 2d of September 1857, I receive a letter from Muhammad Bakht Khan, Commander-in-Chief of the army, saying that all the prisoners throughout the country had been set at large, but that Hardon Baksh, Pran Sukh and others, Dhusar, and Jamnayan Khan, coachman, were still in imprisonment, and directing me to forward them to the army, together with their bonds and engagements, in the custody of the ten troopers he had sent. It is fully known to your Majesty that the above-named prisoners are accountable to this State for frauds amounting to lacs of rupees, and have agreed to pay this money, for which they are so accountable. How then can men, responsible for such claims and demands, be released; for if they should be set free, the loss to me, your slave, would be excessive. The above prisoners are not like those incarcerated in criminal gaols, from whose enlargement and release from prison no manner of loss could result. If such detinrs as the above are released, endless evils, mischievous to my arrangements, will arise, and their suppression afterwards will be exceedingly difficult. Under these circumstances, then, I humbly supplicate that an order may be issued to the Commander-in-Chief to refrain from requiring that persons responsible to the Ballabghar State should be sent to him, and that he will on no account call for them, as, from such proceedings on his part, it is in every point of view evident that damage to the very foundations of this State must accrue. I trust, therefore, that my request will receive the honour of approval, for I, your slave, am an old and devoted servant and well-wisher of your throne, which is the threshold of earth and heaven. I expect, moreover, that your Majesty's servants will make over Hakim Abdul Hak, Pandit Jwals Prashad, and others my officials, as I have claims against them, amounting to about 11 lacs and 25,000 rupees, so that I may realise this money from them. Prayers for the king's prosperity. Further, I forward the Commander-in-Chief's letter in original. After perusal, let it be kindly returned, with a favourable answer to this petition. Petition of the slave Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur. Seal of Rajah Nahar Singh Bahadur.

Abul Ulla Khan, Physician, is re-called, and Examined on his former Affirmation.

Papers Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 13, arranged under the head of loan, are shown to witness, who declares that the seals on all are impressions from the special seal in the prisoner's cypher. The witness declares further that the papers, with the exception of No. 6, are all in the handwriting of Mahomed Lai, the prisoner's secretary. Papers 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, are now shown to witness, and, with exception of 2, 3, and 12, of which he knows nothing, nothing, he gives the following statements of the others. No. 1 is in the handwriting of Mukund Lal; and attested as genuine by the king’s autograph cypher; and No. 11 is also attested with the autograph cypher; but witness does not recognise the handwriting. The orders on the petitions No. 10, 14, 15, and 16 are in the king’s own hand; but the witness does not recognise the handwriting. The translations of the 16 papers under the head of Loan are now read and entered, as follows:—

PAPERS ARRANGED UNDER THE HEAD OF LOAN.

No. 1.

ORDER under the Autograph Cypher of the King, in Pencil, dated 8th July 1857.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur! Learn! That you, the light of our eyes, already know, that a very small balance of cash remains in our treasury. That there is no immediate prospect of revenue from any quarter, and that the little money which remains must of necessity be very soon expended. You are directed to call together, during the day or to-night, all the officers of the regiments which first arrived, in order that they may deliberate and decide on means to be adopted for raising funds to meet the daily necessary and emergent expenses. A meeting of this kind, in the language of the soldiery, is called a “court.” You are to use stringent injunctions in this matter, and the result of the deliberations, in the shape of a feasible plan for replenishing the treasury, whatever it may be, you will cause to be embodied in a petition from them, which you will lay before the royal presence to-morrow. It is a necessary matter of prudence and precaution to make arrangements in this matter before the treasury is quite exhausted. Moreover, as no private treasury was ever kept by us, and as the contributions to the State loan have not been realised, all our servants, old and new, are now in pecuniary difficulties. The money amounting to a lac and 20,000 rupees, which was levied last month as a loan at interest from the merchants of the city for our private expenses, was not all received accordingly. Under these circumstances, how are the expenses of others to be provided for? You will explain all these points, particularly and clearly, to each officer, and having their answer put into writing, will not fail to submit it to-morrow for our consideration.

Note on the face—“Received, 14th July 1857.”

No. 2.

PETITION of the Members of the Court, dated 10th July 1857.

To the King! Nourisher of the Poor!

Respectfully showeth,—That we have had the honour to be favoured by your Majesty’s order, and besides other particulars, we learn that your Majesty’s commands are to the effect, that the treasure which was brought has been nearly all expended in meeting the requirements of the army, and the little now remaining must shortly be paid away to the same end, and that we, the officers of the court, are therefore directed to devise some feasible expedient to replenish the treasury. Your Majesty, in our judgment, as the first step in this matter, the army should go out.

Proposition First.—That money on loan at interest be obtained from some merchant, and that this loan, with interest, be paid off on the establishment of order.

Proposition Second.—That a force consisting of 1,500 infantry, 500 cavalry, and two horse artillery guns, be sent out into the country to establish police stations, revenue offices, and postal arrangements, so that it may become widely known that your Majesty’s rule has been established. Further, that this force be empowered to take charge of all money which may be found collected anywhere on account of the revenues of the State, and which may be voluntarily made over to it. But it should be thoroughly impressed on all its members, that such of them as shall commit any act of plunder, tyranny, or oppression, will be severely punished.

Our first prayer is,—That both the above written suggestions for raising money, may be adopted.

Our second prayer is,—That one of your Majesty’s nobles, in whose integrity your Majesty may have the most complete confidence, may be sent with the force, to make arrangements for the civil administration of the country.

Our third prayer is,—That the noble your Majesty may depute should, however, be warned, as though by this court, that if, on going out, he shall oppress any poor landholder or any subordinate collector of revenue, or if he shall take bribes or ducours, he will be punished according to the decision of this court. The settlement of the proprietary rights of landholders may be effected after the following way.

In each case it shall be ascertained that the name of the claimant is on record in the 162.

papers of the registrar* of proprietary rights in land, or in those of the village accountant;† and the claimant shall be required to file receipts of his former payments of land rent, to show that he contributed to the finances of the State, and that the settlement of assessment had been made in his favour. If, on inspection of their documents, and on the testimony of witnesses, viz., of the registrar of landed rights, the village accountant, and other respectable men of the place, it shall be clearly proved that the claimant had really been the landholder, and the principal man, or one of the principal men, recognised by the Government, as answerable for the revenue of the whole village, or of a considerable section of it, the settlement will be made in his name. If a subsequent claimant shall come forward, his petition will be taken, and an order will be recorded on it, to the effect that a final award will be given after investigation. But in the first instance, the appointment to the position of headman‡ responsible for the revenue of the village will be given to those who had formerly held the situation.

Our fourth prayer is,—That, if the noble deputed to settle the country does not act in every particular according to these orders, the landholders will be at liberty to lay their complaints before this court, and if, after due deliberation, it is found that the noble’s orders have been such as should be reversed, they will be annulled, and the real owners will be installed in their just rights. The petition of the slaves, the officers of the court, Jiwaram Subadar Major Bahadur, Sheoram Misr Subadar Major, Tahniyat Khan Subadar Major, Hetram Subadar Major, and Beniram Subadar Major.

Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 12th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That your Majesty’s order, dated 10th July 1857, directing, with reference to the small balance of cash in the treasury, that the members of the court should deliberate on the matter, and that I should submit their petition on the subject, has been received. In conformity with your Majesty’s orders, the petition, prepared after due deliberation by the members of the court, is submitted to the royal presence, enclosed herein. Such orders as may be issued in this business, will be carried into effect. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave and bondman, Zohur-ad-din.

No. 4.

Order under the Seal engraved in the King’s special Cypher, dated 15th July 1857.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Muhammad Zohur-ad-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. Learn! That, just now, we are under the necessity of raising a temporary loan, at an interest of one per cent. per mensem, from the merchants of the city, to defray the allowances of the army. Many of the merchants paid up the amounts that were claimed from them. Others, however, on the ground of non-payment, were apprehended, and brought to the palace by the soldiers of the royal levies, and are now detained as prisoners in the captain’s guard, attached to the office of the court chamberlain. We have just heard that with the collusion of some infantry soldiers, the relations of the merchants have devised plans to liberate them from custody. Even just now a private of the infantry coming from the direction of the guard at the Lahore Gate of the city, which is included in the Tamaku-ka-kutna, entered the captain guard: and on the instigation of one Lakshmiram, said he would take away Lakshmiram’s son. The officers and men of the guard interposing, the private in question used much violent language towards them, and even threatened to shoot them, and liberate the lad. From the representations of the officers, it is further ascertained that he will return in the afternoon, accompanied by 18 or 20 other soldiers, in order to raise a disturbance with the men of the captain’s guard. You, our son, are therefore directed this instant to send a reinforcement.§ to the captain’s guard for the effectual custody of the prisoners confined there, and you will direct that no soldier be allowed to take away any prisoner. Do not allow the neglect or delay of a second to occur in this matter, for if such things be permitted, our authority must be deranged. Be assured of our kindness.

Note on the reverse by Mirza Moghal probably, but without signature or seal.

Order under the Seal engraved in the King's Special Cypher, dated 28th July 1857.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-Din, otherwise Mirza Moghal, Commander-in-Chief Bahadur! Learn. That no money whatever remains in the treasury for paying the daily and monthly allowances of the troops, nor yet for defraying the daily, urgent expenses of the magazine, the artillery, and the manufacture of powder. Without powder the active operations against the infidels must be interrupted. It is necessary, therefore, quickly to devise some plan for raising funds through the means of a loan, without interest, from all the Panjabi and other merchants, and from the rich servants of the English, and forward it to the Royal treasury. You are further directed to forward drafts of notes of hand, specifying the amount of contribution in each, so that corresponding notes of hand, under our special seal, promising payment on the realisation of the revenue of the country, and the capture of treasuries, may be granted. No fraction of any portion of this loan will be left unpaid. You will give full assurance to all parties on this point, as well as that, in the event of their arranging for the money required, besides being repaid the loan, as a mark of favour, they will be elevated to appointments and emoluments proportioned to their qualifications. But if, notwithstanding such assurances, and the hopes of advantages thus held out, any of the people mentioned do not exert themselves to arrange for the money, but advance unfounded excuses, you, our son, are empowered to chastise them as may be proper, so that severity may bring them to the path of propriety, and obedience to our Royal orders may be the result, and the expenses of the magazine, the artillery, and the manufacture of powder, may be no longer interrupted, and all necessary operations may be prosecuted daily. You will use such well advised steps in this matter as will result in your collecting and sending the money to the treasury within three days. You are directed to enjoin on your agents, however, to refrain from making any demand now on such of the merchants as assisted in the former loan, arranged through the late deceased Manir-ud-dowlah, or on such of them as have given written engagements to pay the balances of their several contributions within fixed periods. You will lay no further demand or claim on the whole of these men, so that nothing at variance with the terms of the agreements given under our special seal may occur, and no cause for distrust to others may arise. Be assured of our kindness.

To Brindaban, alias Bindi Mall, Treasurer to the Artillery.

To the effect that a bond, under our special seal, for 4,108 rupees and 9 ½ annas for the distribution of six months' pay to the artillery, as being bestowed on you our slave, it is incumbent on you to arrange that this money be forthcoming. Be assured that the funds on loan promised by the city merchants, will now be very soon realised by Rai Mukund Lal, when the amounts of this bond will be repaid with every fraction of interest. Entertain every confidence that most stringent orders will be issued for the speedy repayments to you of this loan, and that it will be very soon repaid. Consider this order imperative, and act as you are being written to.

To the Special Slave! Rai Mukund Lal Bahadur.

Consider yourself receiving mercies and know. That the balance of a contribution to the State loan, amounting to 6,300 rupees, has been realised, through Gangarampeon, and a voucher under our special seal has been granted for it; and know also, that a special order has been addressed to you, our special slave, to repay this sum from the receipts on the account of the loan promised by the city merchants. Rs. 4,196. 9 ½, have now been obtained from Rai Brindaban as a temporary loan, at an interest of 1 per cent. per mensem, in order that six months' pay may be given to the artillery. You, our special slave, are therefore ordered to realise quickly the money claimable from the city merchants, and to repay this aggregate sum of Rs. 4,196. 9 ½, with interest, when you will recover and lay before the Royal presence the vouchers granted under our special seal. Such sums as you will afterwards realise, you will pay into the Royal Treasury. You will consider the words in this matter imperative.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Muhammad Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. Learn! That as our servants of the artillery branch are in pecuniary difficulties in consequence of the revenue from Rohat, Kakroli, and other villages not having been received, and as we mercifully cherish a concern for the comforts of all our dependants, and most especially for the comforts of this branch of them, who are now to receive pay after six months, an order has been issued to Brindaban, alias Bindi Mall, treasurer, to arrange for the payment of their allowances, and a bond, under our special seal, has, at the same time, been granted to him for Rs. 4,198. 9₄₃, it being definitely specified that the money on loan, promised by the city merchants, and to be realised through the agency of our special slave, Rai Mukund Lal, shall be the source from which this sum will be repaid. Do you, our son, therefore, also issue an order for the same treasurer's greater satisfaction and confidence, so that, being fully assured, he may exert himself effectually to arrange for the money: and that this very day six months' pay may be distributed to the artillery, after the usual manner, and they, having their difficulties removed, may in this respect be placed on the same footing as the rest of the Government servants. Be assured of our kindness.

Bond or Promissory Note for Money borrowed under the Seal engraved in the King's Special Cypher, dated 29th July 1857.

To the effect, that the sum of Rs. 4,198. 9₄₃ has been paid into the Royal Treasury, as a temporary loan, at an interest of 1 per cent. per mensem, by Brindaban, treasurer, for the payment of six months' allowances to the servants of the artillery branch, and it has been definitely settled that this debt will be repaid from the receipts on account of the loan promised by the city merchants. When, therefore, Rai Mukund Lal shall in a few days, according to the Royal orders, have realised, from the city merchants, the money promised on loan, the whole and entire sum of Rs. 4,198. 9₄₃ will be repaid to the said treasurer, together with the interest, and no balance to the extent of the smallest fraction will be left unpaid, and, moreover, before the liquidation of this debt, no portion of the money that will be realised on account of the State loan will be paid to any other person, or be appropriated even to the Royal requirements. This document is therefore executed as a bond.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That all the influential men of the city, as well as the inhabitants generally, urge that they have no objection to raise funds for the expenses of the army, but that it would be more gratifying to them if the contributions of all, rich or poor, Hindu or Mahomedans, were realised through the influential men of both religions, and that, at the same time, by this arrangement, a much larger sum in the aggregate would be obtained. I therefore pray that this proposal of the city inhabitants may be approved of, and that your Majesty's orders may be issued to the influential men named in the accompanying separate list, to carry it into effect. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) If the whole of the inhabitants contribute, a very considerable amount will be realised, and no one will entertain suspicions against this slave of embezzlement or appropriation. All being attested by the influential men of the city, a list of whom is enclosed, according to their several ability, no individual will have room for excuses or delay.

The Hindus will be assured that your Majesty regards Hindus and Mussulmans with equal favour, and the army will see that the whole of the inhabitants, whether Hindus or Mussulmans, are sharers in the arrangement for raising funds to meet its expenses. Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din.

PETITION of Mathura Das and Salig Ram, Merchants of Delhi, dated 23rd August 1857.

Abstract of Petition, on the face, above the Address.

We slaves, selling our culinary vessels, and overcoming thousand difficulties, have already paid rupees 7,600 in the first instance to your Majesty, and in the second to Mirza Khair Sultan Bahadur. The members of the Court and the officers of the army, intent on our ruin, now demand a third payment. We therefore pray that your Majesty’s injunctions may be laid on the servants of the State and the officers of the army, to refrain from imposing any further demands on these faithful slaves.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—THAT let it not be hidden from your divine Majesty’s knowledge, that previous to this, your Majesty’s commands were laid on us, your faithful slaves, to pay 6,000 rupees into the Treasury; and we were told that we should be subjected to no further demand. Your slave’s house had been previously plundered of everything it contained, and of all we possessed by the soldiers and other people, on the day of the arrival of the troops from Meerut in Delhi, and all our banking and mercantile transactions were, in consequence, utterly ruined and suspended. Unable, therefore, though we were to meet your Majesty’s commands, nevertheless that your Majesty’s orders should be obeyed, we sold such articles of jewellery, culinary vessels, &c., as still remained in our possession, and borrowing besides to make up the full sum, we paid the money into the Royal Treasury on the 3d and 5th of June 1857. Recently again, the Commander-in-Chief Bahadur, and Mirza Khair Sultan Bahadur, placed us under strict and preceptive injunctions to make a second money payment, to meet the expenses of the army. Feeling our utter helplessness, after a thousand difficulties we succeeded in making up 1,500 rupees, which we gave to the said Royal Princes, obtaining in return a receipt, together with an order, under the seal and signature of Mirza Muhammad Khair Sultan Bahadur, (may his prestige last for ever!) that no further demand was, on any account, to be made on us by the servants of the State, or by the officers of the army. Notwithstanding all this, the members of the Court and the other officers of the army now a third time require money from your faithful slaves, and are determined on their ruin. Whereas we, your Majesty’s well-wishers, have no protection, but that of God or your Majesty; and whereas on two former occasions, despite the difficulties we had to overcome, we obeyed your Majesty’s orders and paid money into the treasury, and whereas we are now with difficulty able to procure even the daily necessities of life, we therefore present this petition, and pray that according to the claims of justice, and the dictates of your Majesty’s desire to foster the poor, your Majesty will be pleased to issue orders to all the servants of the State and the officers of the army, to refrain from imposing this third demand on your slaves, as also to desist from their endeavours to ruin your slaves by these repeated demands, which they try to enforce by every means of coercion, so that thus obtaining justice, we may pray for the increase of your Majesty’s wealth and power. Otherwise, in consequence of the dread of degradation, and from their inability to raise the funds required, the lives of your slaves will be sacrificed. It was necessary, and has therefore been submitted. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slaves Mathura Das and Salig Ram, merchants of Delhi. ORDER under the Seal engraved in the King's Special Cypher, dated 27th August 1857.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur, Learn! That the merchant, Ramjidas Gurrwalla, having twice paid money into the Royal Treasury, and having, moreover, in conformity with our orders, made arrangements for the loan of the State, it is incumbent that you, our son, should make no further demand on him. You will consider our injunctions stringent in this matter, and will act in accordance with these orders.

PETITION of Nabi Baksh, and others. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That, in the present anarchy, your slaves have suffered heavy and ruinous losses, inasmuch as whatever commerce we carried on, whether at Calcutta, or Benares, or Cawnpore, or Delhi, or Umballah, or Lahore, has been ruined, and all our mercantile stores have been plundered and devastated, while the burden of our former debts still lies on our shoulders, and we are now without even the means of meeting the daily expenses necessary for the subsistence of ourselves and our families. Let your Majesty ascertain the truth of this statement from trustworthy parties, and by an inspection of our mercantile books. Mirza Moghal Sahib now demands 50,000 rupees from us. Whence can we produce the same? At present we should find it extremely difficult to raise even 5,000 rupees. We, your slaves, have now been three days prisoners in the arrest of Captain Mir Haidar Husein Khan, and the said captain would not allow us out of custody, even to join in the prayers on the Eedi-e-azha. Left without other resource, we petition your Majesty, (at the same time praying to God to protect and preserve you over the heads of us, your slaves,) that your Majesty will issue an order for our release from arrest. We have now for 20 days been administering to the wants of 1,200 mujahids, and shall continue to do so. But more than this is impossible, is out of our power to perform, and cannot be done. We depend on your Majesty's consideration, equalizing that of Cyrus, that, with a fostering concern to nourish and cherish the poor, your Majesty's orders will, with condescending goodness, be issued for our release. It was necessary, and we have submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) The petition of the slaves Nabi Baksh, Haji Mulla Baksh, Karim Baksh, Jawan Bakht, Pir Baksh, Fateh Muhammad, Muhammad Husein, Muhammad Baksh, Taimur Ahmad, Karim Baksh, Kutb-ud-din, Saitulla, Haji Rahim Baksh, Karim Baksh Ahmad, Karamdin, Haji Ahmad, and others.

Mirza Moghal will take recognition for future good behaviour, so that they may not again, in infringement of positive orders, send commissariat necessaries or other supplies to the infidels, and provided the advice of the Lord Governor coincides, he will then release them all.

PETITION of Mirza Moghal. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

It is known to your Majesty that the army having been reduced to starvation in consequence of not being paid their daily allowances, your slave, as well as they, were constrained to petition your Majesty on the subject, when, having condescended to view the distress, you were pleased to issue orders that some plan for raising a loan, to carry on the expenses of the army, should be devised; and accordingly, a Royal missive was bestowed on your slave in this matter. In accordance therewith, your slave summoned the merchants and Panjabis of the city, and conferred with them on the subject, and some gave written engagements to pay in a day or two, and then went away. I have just learned that Muhammad Bakht Khan has received a written order also, to summon the merchants and obtain money from them. A circumstance like this is calculated to cause disunion and disaffection in the army. Let your Majesty consider this, and recall the order given to Muhammad Bakht Khan, and let your Majesty also prohibit his taking steps in this business, because arrangements for the money have already been made by me. Considering it necessary, I have submitted this petition. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din. No date.

PETITION of Muhammad Khair Sultan. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—THAT sided by 200 troopers and a brigade major, placed at his disposal by the Lord Sahib, your slave has been assiduously engaged, since morning, in collecting the money required by your Majesty’s Government. Just now, however, the merchants of the city have put forward the objection, that Gouri Shankar has ordered them on no account to give the money to any of the Royal Princes, but to pay it into the Court only. Your Majesty! Under such circumstances, extreme confusion and derangement of plans is to be expected, and mischief-makers of this sort are deserving of severe punishment, for wantonly setting plans on foot to interrupt the business of the State. Your slave submits that, until such mischief-makers shall have been severely punished, till then arrangements which will result in success cannot be made. It is submitted for information. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the lowly Muhammad Khair Sultan. No date.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Besides the shopkeepers, you will realise money to-morrow morning, as may be advisable, from merchants also, and will forward it to the Royal presence. Let no one be put to inconvenience, nor yet let the business of the State be interrupted—(a couple of words here are illegible, but the sense is not affected or left incomplete). This which is here written is the only prohibition, and there is none other.

The Court, at 4 p.m., adjourns till 11 a.m., on Monday, the 1st of February.

FIFTH DAY’S PROCEEDINGS.

Monday, 1st February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 a.m. in the Hall of Special Audience in the Palace at Delhi. The President, members, interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-General, are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court.

The interpreter reads in Persian the original papers under the head of Loan, the translations of which were perused on 26th ultimo. Ahsan Ulla Khan is recalled on his former affirmation, and the eight papers arranged under the head of Pay are shown to him.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—What do you know of the handwriting or seal on these papers?

Answer.—The orders on six of the papers, viz., Nos. 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 are in the handwriting of the prisoner. The writing of No. 2 is that of Mukund Lal, the prisoner’s secretary, and the seal is an impression from the special one engraved in his cypher. The writing in paper No. 3, which is a petition from the prisoner’s son Mirza Moghal, and is attested by his official seal as commander-in-chief, appears to be in the handwriting of Jowulla Nath, one of his clerks.

The translation of these papers is now read and entered as follows:

The papers in original Persian are also now read to the prisoner.

Order attested with the Seal engraved in the King’s Special Cypher, dated 22nd June 1857.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur, learn! That by the representations of Samman Lal, we are informed, that in the first instance, advances were given as daily rations to the artillerymen serving the guns in the Cashmere and Baddanw Gate Main Guard and other bastions through the agency of the Mu’azzam-ud-Dowlah Bahadur,* and that, subsequently, from the 11th June 1857, daily money payments have been made instead, as per separate list. That although the supply of rations, or the daily allowance of money instead, is a matter appertaining to the military department, in the above instances, the expense was defrayed from the Royal Treasury, and that under these circumstances he prays for an order under our Royal signature, to our illustrious son, Mirza Moghal Bahadur, to the effect that he should cause reimbursement to be made. You are directed to remit to Samman Lal the sum of 110 rupees, agreeably to the statement furnished by him, the details of which are subjoined. You are further directed to make arrangements for the future payment of the daily allowances to the artillerymen the same as those, according to which, they are paid to the whole of the infantry regiments. Be assured of our kindness.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully Sheweth,—That your slave having adopted means to assure the whole of the army, infantry and cavalry, of their being paid and promoted, as soon as the country shall have been settled, the revenue realised, and the enemy finally and fully defeated, encloses a copy of an outline of these measures, and trusts that agreeably to it, an order will be graciously issued by your Majesty, so that the army may be made acquainted with your Majesty's feelings of favour and kindness in their behalf, and being thus inspired with hopes of advancement and distinction, each and all may fight in your Majesty's cause, even to the sacrifice of their lives. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, Zohur-ud-din, attested with the official seal of the commander-in-chief Bahadur. No order. (Enclosure referred to not forthcoming.)

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully Sheweth,—That a petition, with a nominal list, has this day been received from Muhammad Jahangir Khan, captain of the Gwalior Rajah's Artillery, praying that some pecuniary provision may be made to enable him to meet the expenses of the daily exigencies of existence. Your Majesty's orders are to the effect, that all newly arrived troops are to be referred to the Bareilly General.

The aforesaid petition and list are therefore submitted herewith in original. Such orders as may be issued in this case will be acted upon. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, Zohur-ud-din.

Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 12th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully Sheweth,—That the sum of 37,000 rupees, with the additional 2,000 rupees from the Commissariat funds, with which your slave was favoured on the 12th of July 1857, has been all expended, and not a fraction now remains in hand, and while such is the case, your Majesty has passed an order on the petition of the cavalry men recently arrived, that your slave will make arrangements for paying their daily allowances. The cavalrymen shown in the subjoined list claim arrears for 16 or 20 days each, that is to the 12th July 1857. Your petitioner therefore prays that 10,000 rupees may now be granted in order that these arrears may be paid off; and he further prays that in future he may be placed in funds each day, to pay the allowances for that day.

In consequence of the scarcity of funds in the Treasury, so large an amount cannot be given. Those who are willing to be satisfied with a trifle, may be paid something as pecuniary assistance.

Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 13th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Hitherto, Karim Baksh, nisardar of the 1st Lucknow Irregular Cavalry, and the men of his corps, have been paid monthly. He has now presented a petition, dated the 12th July 1857, soliciting payment of daily allowances, in the same way that they are paid to others, and demanding arrears for 19 days. The real state of the matter is, that these people have learned that there is very little money in the treasury, and it is on this account they now apply for daily allowances. Such orders as may be issued will be complied with. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Those who are paid monthly will not get daily allowances.

Petition of Mirza Muhammad Azim. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully Showeth,—That the servants of your Majesty who came from Hansi and Hisar, and who have been placed under your charge, have not received their pay for two months and 20 days. As the treasuries of Sirsa, Hisar, Hansi, and other places, were, with great care and zeal, brought by them, and lodged in the Royal Treasury, and here too, accompanying your slave in every engagement, three or four of these servants daily certify their fidelity with their lives, they therefore now demand their pay. Your slave, actuated by zeal, has arranged that if your Majesty will now grant one month’s pay out of the two months and 20 days’ arrears which are due, he will satisfy the men. If, on the other hand, no pay whatever is now granted, the force will have cause to be disheartened. It is strange that all the rest of the army should have been paid. I transmit enclosed in this petition an abstract for one month’s pay for all the men of the force, in expectation that orders may be issued. It was necessary, and has been represented. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the special slave, Muhammad Azim, door-keeper (may his sins be forgiven).

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Agreeably to your Majesty’s orders, 10,000 rupees, part of the revenue received from Garhi Harsaru, were drawn from the Treasury and distributed to the troops in payment of four days’ allowances. Two days’ allowances more are now due; and of the revenue received from Garhi Harsaru, a balance of 7,010 rupees and 13 annas remains in the Treasury. It is expected, from your Majesty’s condescending kindness, that orders will be issued to draw this money, and distribute it in payment of daily allowances to the cavalry and infantry. It was necessary, and I have submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, Mirza Zohur-ud-din.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

The sum of 5,000 rupees was on each of two former occasions granted as the allowances for two days, and is now again sent. Do you distribute it. No date.

No. 1.

Joint Petition of Shekh Bansu, Corporal, and 60 Privates of the 44th Regiment Native Infantry, dated 24th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth.—That your slaves started from Agra for Meerut, in charge of 90 Arab horses; brought their charge in safety to Aligarh, and came on thence to Bulandshahr. On arriving at Bulandshahr they found that disturbances had commenced, and saw hundreds of the country people riotously plundering the treasury. Feeling it a duty to their faith, and assured of God’s sanction, they attacked these rieoters, and secured what remained of the treasure, and brought it and the horses to Delhi, intending to make them over to your Majesty, as the property of the State. On our arrival at the bridge of boats there remained in our possession 83 horses and the treasure, minus 42,000 rupees, which were laden on two wagons, and were plundered from us on the road. When we crossed the bridge we were met by numbers of the townspeople, who beat the grooms, and forcibly took away several of the horses. Had your slaves not been under the impression that these men had been sent by your Majesty for our protection, your slaves would have used resistance. The treasure and the 22 horses which remained with us have been made over to the Government; the missing horses are, however, still with the cavalrymen and others who took them from us, and can be recognised by the grooms. We therefore pray that orders may be issued to Mirza Moghal to recover them, as they are pointed out by the grooms, from the men in whose possession they are, and to restore them to the State.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Mirza Moghal will institute inquiries, and tracing the horses upon the clues the petitioners may give, will settle this matter in the way that may be proper.

Note on the reverse.—"Remained in abeyance."

Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 26th May 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

As your Majesty’s army is about marching to Meerut, in view of efficient arrangements being made for collecting and protecting commissariat supplies, it is urged that 20 horsemen and 50 footmen of the new levies, may be assigned to your slave for this purpose. Petition of the slave Zohur-ul-din.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Mir Haidar Hussein Khan will depute 20 horsemen, and Shah-Rukh Beg 50 footmen. (The rest of the order is illegible.)

No. 3.

Petition of Gouri Shankar Sukal, of the Hurriannah Light Infantry Battalion.

To the King! Nourisher of the Poor!

The state of affairs here is. That by the blessing of God, and through your Majesty’s auspices, your Majesty’s rule was established at 10 o’clock A.M. to-day. The districts of Hisar and Sirsa are both in the possession of this regiment, and be assured the corps will shortly shortly come to your Majesty’s presence, bringing treasure with them. We urge for your consideration that our strength is that of only one regiment, and some men we are absent on general and special leave. Moreover, we have hitherto furnished detachments which were relieved monthly, for the command duties at Sirsa and Hisar. The distance from Hansi to Sirsa is 90 miles, that from Hansi to Delhi is 90 miles more. It will be difficult for us, being only one regiment, to travel over this 180 miles with the treasures of two districts. It is on this account urged for your Majesty’s consideration, that a reinforcement of artillery and cavalry may be sent to our aid, as also a relief to take our place here. An order is also required specifying whether we shall come by the way of Rohtak or by that of Jhajjar. A further petition is, that the British troops from Karnaul will certainly come to cut us up. It is necessary, therefore, that your Majesty should reflect on this, and issue your commands accordingly. (Prayers for the king’s prosperity.) Petition of the slave Gouri Shankar Sukal, Hurriannah Light Infantry Battalion.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Mirza Moghal will make all necessary arrangements.

ORDER attested with the Seal engraved in the King’s Special Cypher, dated 30th May 1857.

The Officers and all the Troopers of the 4th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry. To the Men of two Companies of the 5th Regiment of Native Infantry and of one Company of the 29th Regiment Native Infantry, and to all other Cavalry and Infantry, besides Chaudi Lal and Ramcharan, Troopers of the 5th Troop, 4th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry.

Have come into our royal presence, and affirmed, that the whole army, cavalry and infantry, entertain the resolve to tender their allegiance at our royal court, and that they can bring with them treasure and the various munitions of war. In acceptance of their prayers, it is ordered—provided that murder and the pillage of villages on the way, and in the vicinity of the seat of the Imperial Government, shall not be perpetrated, and provided also that after reaching the royal presence you will observe full obedience in all matters—then without hesitation or delay present yourselves at our court, bringing the treasure alluded to. The royal favour will in every way be bestowed on you slaves.

Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 9th June 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Your Majesty has been pleased to direct that your slave should proceed into the batteries, and your slave accordingly sent for and consulted General Abdul Sammad Khan Bahadur,* telling him that he should also go. He, however, replied that, as no further confidence could be placed on the infantry, and the cavalry only could be depended on, his advice was not in favour of my going, nor would be go himself. He added, that when the forces of the chief’s† government, however, shall have arrived, the soldiers composing them being experienced and tried veterans, his and my going into the batteries then, will be proper. Your Majesty’s orders directed that I should not act in any matter without the said general’s concurrence; and he not giving his consent in this business, your slave refrained from going with some troopers, who came and clamoured for his accompanying them. Other particulars relating to this matter I shall submit verbally, and as regards your Majesty’s commands, that Mir Haidar Hussein should not be allowed to have anything to do with the artillery, or I should be visited with your Majesty’s displeasure and reprehension, your slave had prohibited his interference; but the troopers themselves seized Haidar Hussein, and carried him away. (Prayers for the king’s prosperity.) Petition of the slave Mirza Zohur-ud-din.

The contents of the petition have been understood. Act according to Abdul Sammad Khan Bahadur’s suggestions.

To the King! Adoration of the World!

I have this day received certain information that near 2,000 troops who have revoluted from the army, are now encamping in Nasirabad, and will be here to-morrow. There are no means for arranging for the usual supplies at this place. I hope, therefore, that some officer or troopers will be deputed by your Majesty on this duty. (Prayers for the king’s prosperity.) A further petition is, that your petitioner had no previous knowledge of the approach of these troops, or he might have made arrangements in anticipation. The information brought to-day was quite unexpected. May it be suggested that such orders should now be issued as can be carried out. Petition of the slave Zabtay Khan, attached to the police station of Basant. No order on the petition.

This petition has been laid before us, in order that measures may be adopted to carry out its suggestions, and you are accordingly directed to issue written orders to the Sappers and Miners, and to the whole of the cavalry, to accompany the Nasirabad force, the first to construct the batteries, and the second to co-operate in the attack the day after to-morrow.

To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. Learn! That owing to the large daily expenditure of powder, none is now left in the magazine, and orders have in consequence been issued that materials required in its manufacture were to be immediately requisitioned from the district.
facture should be purchased; and that though large numbers of powder-makers are employed, it cannot be produced as expeditiously as is necessary, while the daily demand for it is very emergent. You are directed to collect it from the men named in the subjoined list, as well as all that you may find after search in places where barrelsof it are likely to be forthcoming, and to have all you may thus collect conveyed to the magazine by to-morrow. Consider this business as taking precedence in importance above all others, and see that every necessary precaution is observed in conveying the powder to the magazine, so that when it is required, there may be no interruption to the operations, and a cause of complaint as well as of danger to the men when fighting, may be removed. Be assured of our kindness.

To the Emblem of Honour Khoja-Nazir-ud-din, Police Officer of Bhadrapur.

Be it known to you! that information is derived from your petition of the arrival in Arab Serai of some men of the cavalry and infantry of the Nenmich force, and of their demanding large quantities of commissariat necessaries and confectioneries from the bazaar people, which, in consequence of the paucity of the population, are not procurable. It is observed, also, that you request: that the chief police officer of the city may be directed to send out the supplies required, and accordingly orders in this particular were immediately issued to him. But, owing to the unsettled state of affairs in the city, the presence of the soldiers of the regular infantry, and to the circumstance of most of the shops being closed, it will be difficult to supply confectionery in the quantity needed; meal, &c. may be procured. PETITION of all the Officers of the 11th Regiment Native Infantry, dated 16th July 1857.

To the Nourisher of the Poor! his Highness the General Sahib Bahadur!

Yesterday, about noon, Kalyan Singh, corporal, having eaten his dinner, went to the ramparts, where he found Mahabal Singh, sepoy of the second company 11th regiment Native Infantry, who was on duty at the time as sentry over the guns, asleep at his post. Seeing this neglect, the corporal took away the sentry's musket, and then waking him, asked him what had become of it. The sentry replied that he did not know who had taken it away. The corporal immediately reported the circumstance to Somar Singh, Sahibdor Bahadur, and, agreeably to his orders, the sepoy was placed in arrest. To-day all the officers of the regiment assembled as a court, and the prisoner, Mahabal Singh, appearing before them, acknowledged having been asleep while on duty as a sentry. The offence of the prisoner being thus established by his own confession, he is forwarded to your Highness with this petition. The punishment which may be awarded by your Highness will be approved of by all of us. The petition of all the commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the 11th regiment Native Infantry, stationed at the Ajmir Gate.

Order by the King.

Ordered,—That your petition, reporting the offence of Mahabal Singh, sepoy, in going to sleep while on duty as a sentry, as established by his own confession before the court, and forwarding him to the court of the Commander-in-chief Bahadur, with the view that the punishment necessary in the case might be awarded, has been considered. Your court are therefore directed yourselves to determine what punishment may be adequate, and to carry it out at once. Your decision will be approved of. Authenticated by the king's autograph cypher in ink. Dated 17 July 1857.

Note below the Order,—"An order has been written."

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That your Majesty is cognizant that before Muhammad Bakht Khan came, active operations of war were carried on daily and without intermission, and your Majesty knows likewise that since the arrival of the Bareilly general several engagements have taken place. It so occurred to-day that your slave, purposing to make an attack, had formed the army and taken it outside the city, when the above-named general interposed, and for a long time kept the whole force standing inactive, wanting to know by whose orders it had gone out, and, saying that it was not to proceed without his permission, caused it to return. A proceeding like this even an open enemy would not attempt, namely, that the army should be proceeding to an attack, and one should interfere and cause it to return. Your slave therefore supplicates that if the entire control and management of the army have, from the royal presence, been bestowed on the said general, your slave may be directed, by written order, to refrain from interfering in all military matters, and he will no longer interfere, but will acquaint the officers of the army that for the future they are to remain with the said general, and are to yield obedience to him. Having his orders reversed cannot but cause vexation and chagrin to any officer, high or low. If, on the other hand, the control of the army is supposed to be vested in your slave, the said general should not interfere; he has entire authority over his own regiments. Such demands as are made for the services of his regiments from this he should invariably comply with. Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din. No order.

_Petition of Mirza Moghal, dated 19th July 1857._

To the King! Shelter of the World!

_Your petitioner's prayer is, that through your Majesty's propitious auspices, arrangements have now been completed for carrying on active offensive operations daily, night and day, and that since yesterday this has been done. If aid could be afforded now from the direction of Alapur, with the Divine blessing and through the influence of your Majesty's ever-enduring prestige, a final and decisive victory, it is to be expected, would soon be obtained. I therefore pray that positive orders may be issued from the throne to the Bareilly general to afford the aid in question; that is, that he be directed to proceed with his troops to Alapur, and to make an attack on the infidels from that direction, while your slave with this division of the army makes another on this side, so that the two forces co-operating in the fight may in one or two days consign all the damnable hell-doomed infidels to hell. Moreover, it is to be expected that the force going to Alapur will cut off the enemy's supplies. It was necessary, and has been therefore submitted. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That your slave has come to this city from Tonk, accompanied by nearly 500 men, who are organized as a body, and by nearly 1,500 besides, who have come devoting their lives, to fight in the religious war against the infidels. That he and his followers joined in the attack yesterday, that 18 infidels were dispatched to hell by your slave's own hand, and that five of his followers were killed and five wounded.

Your Majesty. The rest of the army gave us no help whilst we were engaged in combat with the infidels. Had they even stood by, only to make a show of support, it was to have been expected, that with the help of Providence, a complete victory would yesterday have been obtained. But there is no remedy against the will of God. I trust that some arms, together with some trifling funds, may be bestowed on my followers, so that they may have the strength to fight against and slay the infidels, and in doing this may realize their desire. To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That I have on two, or rather on three former occasions, petitioned your Majesty for artillery, and now again submit this petition, to be supplied with the following ordnance:—

12-pounder guns, four. If four can be granted well, otherwise let two certainly be given.

10-pounder guns, also four. If four can be granted it will be just what is desired, if not the presence of two is certainly advisable.

24-pounder guns, let the same number be granted, and it will be extreme kindness to your slave, otherwise the presence of two is extremely desirable. Also 32-pounder guns, four or two. It will be a great favour.

Mortars, 10-inch, four; 8-inch, four; and 5½-inch four, and 24-howitzers, eight.

And I also trust I may be favoured by your Majesty with the full allowance of ammunition for those guns, such as shell, shrapnel, and common shells. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the special slave, attested with the seal of Muhammad Bakht Khan.

Order under the seal of Mirza Muhammad Khair Sultan Bahadur, son of Muhammad Bahadur Shah, King, Defender of the Faith, dated 11th August 1857.

To the Officers, Subadar, Chiefs and others of the whole Military Force coming from the Bombay Presidency.

To the effect, that the statement which some person has made to you, of the defeat of the Royal Troops at Delhi, is altogether a false and lying fabrication, contrary to the contemptible infidels, namely, the English. The true story is, that nearly 80,000 or 90,000 regular organised military troops are now present here, nearly 10,000 or 15,000 regular and other cavalry. These troops are constantly engaged, night and day, in attacks upon the infidels, and have driven back their batteries from the ridge. In three or four days, hence, please God, the whole ridge will be taken, when every one of the base unbelievers will be humbled and ruined, and will be sent to hell. You are therefore directed, immediately on seeing this order, to use every endeavour speedily to reach the royal presence, so that joining the army of the faithful, you may give proofs of your zeal, and may establish your claims to renown. Consider this imperative.

ORDER.

From Mirza Khair, Sultan to the Bombay Army, dated 11th August 1857.

Giving assurance that the report of the defeat of the royal army is a lying invention of the English, who will themselves be exterminated in three or four days.

Order under the Seal engraved in the King's Special Cypher, dated 13th August 1857.

To the Slaves, the Emblems of Valour, Karimulla Khan, Risaldar, 1st Regiment; Lal Singh, Subadar, 1st Troop of Artillery; Sahib Lal, Subadar, 2d Troop of Artillery; Sheikh Imam-Baksh, Subadar, 3d Troop of Artillery; Lal Pande, Subadar, 4th Troop of Artillery; Ram Singh, Subadar, 5th Troop of Artillery; Amanat Ali, Subadar, 1st Regiment of Infantry; Lala Prasad, Subadar, 2d Regiment of Infantry; Jiwa Singh, Subadar, 3d Regiment of Infantry; Ramlain, Subadar, 4th Regiment of Infantry; Basharat Ali, Subadar, 5th Regiment of Infantry, of the Gwalior Contingent Force, and the Officers of the Morar Infantry.

Learn! that the petition of you slaves has been perused, and the brave acts of you valiant soldiers experienced in war have been ascertained. It is incumbent on you that, accompanied by the infantry of the Gwalior State and the rajah, you should engage in steps to capture the Fort of Agra, or you may obtain treasure from the rajah, and use means to capture the fort with your own forces. From the officer down to the private, each and every individual will be deemed deserving of our highest favour and consideration, and will be honoured with favours and preferments beyond limit, and will in gradation be advanced to the ranks of adjutant, general, and colonel.

To the King! Dispenser of Blessing on the World! Shelter of Mankind, &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That the order passed on your slave's petition, that besides the 600 soldiers now present, he may entertain sufficient men to complete a regiment of infantry, shall be carried into effect. Your petitioner's request, however, was that orders might be issued to change the designation of the force under your slave from that of Ali-Ghol* for any other which your Majesty might be pleased to select, as the men composing it have been thoroughly drilled and disciplined.

Whatever designation your Majesty may now assign them, they will always retain. Your slave, therefore, prays that orders, under your Majesty's seal and signature, may be issued in this matter. Petition of Bhanwari Singh, Private of the 30th Regiment of Native Infantry, dated 23d August 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully sheweth,—That before men are employed in the magazine it is necessary that each individual should be made to declare his place of residence; and the correctness of his statement on this point should be tested by a reference to the place itself, or he might be made to furnish security. And further, a descriptive roll of him should be prepared and should be placed in the office, and he should then be employed. If these precautions are observed, no fears for the safety of the magazine need be entertained; but if, without inquiry, every one is indiscriminately engaged, emissaries of the enemy may obtain admission, and cause much damage. Moreover, one officer with a clerk, might be stationed in the magazine, for the sole purpose of mastering and inspecting the labourers, morning and evening, to see that no strangers or agents of the enemy are admitted. Your slave presents this petition solely from feelings of zeal, and relies on your Majesty's kindness and consideration for the issue of orders, under your Majesty's signature, that efficient arrangements for the protection of the magazine may be observed. Petition of Jewaram Ajodhya Chobé and others, Commissioned Officers of the 3d Regiment Native Infantry, dated 29th August 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Your Majesty's orders in the first instance were to the effect that such men as were late in joining the royal forces should be kept on as supernumeraries, in the grades in which they had formerly served. This order has given entire satisfaction to all the officers and soldiers. Those men who have been late in arriving have now, however, given a petition, and have had a seniority list prepared. All the privates and non-commissioned officers have in this matter accordingly represented to their commissioned officers the injustice they will suffer, if, to the prejudice of the evident claims of those who came long before, have been daily in the batteries, and have on every occasion yielded obedience to all your Majesty's commands, places are given to men who have joined after such great delay. We, all the commissioned officers of the 3d Regiment of Infantry, therefore pray that your Majesty's first order, which gave such entire satisfaction to the whole army, may be allowed to continue in undisturbed force. Considering it necessary, we have laid the matter before your Majesty. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of Nur Muhammad Khan, Rissaldar 10th Irregular Cavalry, dated 29th August 1857.

Abstract of Petition in the Margin above the Address.

The petitioner was in the 10th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, which consisted of 600 troopers; 50 of them are now here present, and have come to fight for their faith. The petitioner prays that he may be authorised to call in the whole of the troopers, and re-enrol them.

To the King! Shelter of the World! Nourisher of the Poor!

My Corps, the 10th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, was stationed at Peshawur in the cantonments of Nowshera. Five of the officers, Keshri Singh, Kalandar Khan, &c., combining with the infidels, and practising deceptions on the men, had us called out to a parade, and had our arms, such as carbines, swords, &c., taken from us. Cheerfully enduring the greatest hardships and difficulties for two months, we slaves have now come to your royal presence to defend the faith and to offer up our lives in protecting your Majesty's throne. Moreover, the English having placed their guns in position against us, we abandoned all our property, money, and three months' arrears of pay, and having accomplished the journey, have now presented ourselves at your royal door to sacrifice our lives. Most of the troopers of the 10th Irregular Cavalry have gone to their homes, but their residence is near. If I am authorised, I shall immediately call them all in, and set up the corps at once, when it will remain in attendance, and will employ itself, night and day, in giving effect to your Majesty's orders. It will, besides, join in the attacks against the batteries, and its members will willingly sacrifice their lives, if necessary. This alone is your slave's ambition also. Let a written order be bestowed, that he may at once enrol the troopers of the 10th Irregular Cavalry.

About 50 of them are now present with your slave. On obtaining your Majesty's order he will enrol the rest. It was necessary, and I have therefore submitted it. (Prayers for the king's prosperity.) Secondly, if your Majesty's orders are kindly bestowed on your slave, and some horses are given to him, he will remain in attendance. Petition of the slave Nur Muhammad Khan, Rissaldar of the 10th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, come from Peshawur from the cantonments of Nowshera, expectant of the royal favour.

Petition of Colonel Ahmad Khan, stationed at Ghazi-ud-din-naggar, dated 9th September 1857.

To the King ! Nourisher of the Poor !

Respectfully sheweth,—That leaving your imperial presence, your slave came to Ghaziabad, and here learned that yesterday, the 8th of September, some Europeans, assisted by the Jats, burned and sacked Pilkhowa, and three or four neighbouring villages. The force engaged in this destruction was comprised of about 30 Europeans, 500 Jats of the Dhubia tribe, and four guns. They are still encamped there, and the farmers of the surrounding country, fearing similar devastation, and feeling their helplessness, are paying the revenue. Moreover, definite intelligence has been received to-day, that near 50 Europeans and Jats, with two or three guns, have assembled at Begamabad with the intention of destroying the bridge over the Hindun and of desolating Ghaziabad, and have cut off the supplies which used to be taken to Delhi from Pilkhowa, &c. It is therefore prayed that, with kind consideration, your Majesty will send some royal troops, accompanied by guns, in this direction for the punishment of the infidels, so that full chastisement may be inflicted on them, and the collection of the revenue of the State may be commenced. If, however, delay shall occur, the bridge over the Hindun will be broken, and the enemy will desolate Ghaziabad. Furthermore, there is a very strong fortress of masonry at the village of Mukimpoor, near Pilkhowa, in which there are about 50 or 60 mounds of cold gunpowder. Should the Europeans get into this fortress, their expulsion afterwards will be very difficult and a second Dum Dumma will come into existence, and I shall then be utterly unable to counteract their operations. If my regiment of infantry accompanied by guns could be thrown into the said fortress by to-morrow the English might be well punished, and would certainly be routed with deserved chastisement; but your Majesty being master, it is your prerogative to decide. Such orders as may be issued will be carried out. (Prayers for the continuance of the king's power.) Petition of the slave, attested with the seal of Ahmad Khan, stationed at Ghaziabad.

To the King ! Shelter of the World !

Your Divine Majesty! Your slave was a private in the 7th company of the 59th Regiment of Native Infantry, which was stationed at Amritsar. The English disarmed the men, and made them prisoners. Those of them, however, who get opportunities make their escape and come away. Your slave has presented himself solely to fight for the faith. His arms, however, were taken from him by the English at Amritsar, and such personal property as he had has been plundered from him by the Googars. He is now without funds to meet his daily expenses of food, and he is also without arms; he therefore trusts that he may now be enrolled in the 53rd Regiment of Native Infantry, in which a brother of his, by name Kasir-ud-din, is serving. Your slave also trusts that as he has come solely to fight for the faith, pecuniary assistance and arms may be bestowed on him; and obtaining the means of subsistence, he will ever pray for your Majesty's prosperity. To Mirza Moghal.

Son,—The illustrious and valiant Mirza Zohur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadur. Learn, that the numerous applications presented by men of valorous aspirations who have already done much service, in the hope of obtaining employment as foot soldiers and horsemen, which you have submitted, enclosed in your petition, have been received. Considering the want of funds in the State treasury, the absence of all present prospects of the realisation of the land revenue from the different subdivisions of districts, owing to the circumstance that no military force has as yet gone out to arrange this matter, and the prevalence of murder and pillage in the immediate vicinity of the seat of Government; and further, in consideration of the collection in the city of large organised military forces from all parts of the country, and the insufficiency of the treasuries brought by them for their own daily expenses; permission to employ these men cannot be accorded, for whence can they be aided with funds, or pay, to meet their expenses? Such being the case, it is injudicious to give hopes to people whose homes are far distant; it is therefore ordered that you will distinctly inform the men giving the petitions referred to, and all others who may hereafter present similar petitions, that such of them as can remain for one or two months without requiring pecuniary assistance, may stay. When order shall have been established, and the revenue of the country realised, they will be rewarded with appointments commensurate with with their several qualifications; but this, even then, will only be done when the prior claims of the regular military troop shall have been satisfied. It is inexpedient, therefore, retaining men who are in pecuniary destitution, on the indistinct hope of employment hereafter, based on the contingency of the establishment of order. Please God, when the present disturbed state of affairs shall have given place to tranquility, when officers to receive the revenue shall have been established throughout the country, and the revenue shall have begun to come in from all directions, thousands of men may then be employed; at present there is no option. Two of the petitions have been signed. The purport of all is the same; inform all the petitioners. Be assured of our kindness.

Joint Petition of Jowahir Singh, Sepoy, stationed at Meerut; Roushan Singh, Landowner, of Brahjari; and Chandi Ram, Landowner. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That two days have now elapsed since your slaves submitted a petition, regarding arrangements in Babughar, Aligarh, &c.; but nothing appears to have been done by the Government as yet in the way of despatching troops or adopting measures. It is to be apprehended that delay in the settlement of the said districts may lead to loss to the State, besides that involved in the loss of the treasuries at present in safety at Babughar, Aligarh, Chautar and other places. Cherisher of the Poor! At Babughar there are 20,000 rupees under the safe custody of 24 military men, and at Chautar there are 20 lacs of rupees in the charge of Mardan Khan, guarded by 600 Jats, while the treasury at Aligarh is forthcoming, guarded by three companies of regular infantry. Moreover, there are 1,500 horses at Babughar, together with the money for their necessary current expenses. If your Majesty will take immediate steps for despatching troops and for establishing arrangements in the above places, it is to be expected that the whole of the above said property will be secured and will come into your Majesty's possession; but if a delay of one or two days is allowed to occur, there is undoubtedly room for apprehension that it will be all lost. There is not a man of the English army in the whole of the space between the two rivers* from Saharanpoor to Agra, who will offer to oppose one regiment of infantry sent by your Majesty. There is only one Turnbull, who, with the joint magistrate at Dalnudiahar, continues exciting disturbances, enlisting men, and communicating intelligence. In case of delay on your Majesty's part, your Majesty's loss is to be apprehended. The inhabitants of 60 villages, men of the Kehatati caste, are ready to lay down their lives for your Majesty. But the residents of the other side of the Ganges do not fully credit what your slave tells them. However, when these landholders shall have seen a small body of troops placed under your slave, together with your Majesty's written order, and will have had the evidence of their own eyes, they will all engage to die in your Majesty's cause. I trust, therefore, that an order under the state seal will be bestowed on your slave, directing him to raise new horse and foot levies. Assured of the help of the military force, 84 villages in the holding of Kalhar Singh, landholder of Moknimpur, in the district of Meerut; and in the same way, 87 villages, with Devi Singh, farmer of Blumahr, who have already resolved to sacrifice their lives for your Majesty, will immediately on seeing the force and the order under your Majesty's seal, openly engage with all their energies in your Majesty's cause. They are, as one body, animated by one soul, all of one mind with your slave. Your slave's only ambition is the welfare of your Majesty's government. If delay is allowed to occur, serious loss to the State will be the certain result. Beyond this your Majesty has the power. It was necessary, and I have therefore submitted it, from zeal for your Majesty. It is requested that one regiment of infantry with artillery may be placed at your slave's disposal. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slaves Jowahir Singh, sepoy, stationed at Meerut; Roushan Singh, landholder, of Brahjari; and Chandi Ram, landholder. Seal of "Roushan Singh, year 1253."

Mirza Moghal will immediately issue orders to the officers of the infantry, and as regards the despatch of troops, will act agreeably to Jowahir Singh's requisition.

herein, and I trust that such orders as are issued may be written on the face of each petition, so that they be acted upon. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

As regular military troops are now coming in great numbers from all directions, and there is no money in the treasury, under these circumstances how (a portion of the order here is illegible) is it to be done? You are accordingly directed to write in fuller detail.

PETITION of Rajab Ali. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That your slave has been sending for the ordnance stores from the magazine, and having them placed for safety in certain cells in the palace, ever since the day of the revolution. Nathu Khan, however, now objects to sending these stores, and opposes your slave’s requisitions for their being brought from the magazine to the palace. Your slave therefore depends on your Majesty’s kindly kindness and consideration, and trusts that an order may be issued to the Lord of the World, Mirza Muhammad Moghal Bahadur, that whatever stores your slave may write for may, on his requisition, be immediately forwarded from the magazine, that they may be placed in safety. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the home-born slave Rajab Ali.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Our son, Mirza Moghal, will imperatively direct Nathu Khan to forward to the palace, without delay, all magazine stores that Rajab Ali may send for. Moreover, it is not proper that Nathu Khan should remain in the magazine. You will, therefore, appoint some other trustworthy person in his stead.

Note on the reverse.—“Orders have been issued.”

PETITION of Rambahsh, Subadar of the 74th, and Kuli Yar Khan, Subadar Bahadur, of the 9th Regiment of Native Infantry. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That we entertain no manner of objection to go out and fight, and to raise entrenchments, in conformity with your Majesty’s orders to the address of us home-born slaves; but this is a day of the week on which it is unpropitious to proceed towards the East. We shall accordingly leave at a propitious hour. However, we will commence with the entrenchments, &c., at three o’clock. We have submitted this for your Majesty’s information. The petition of Rambahsh, Subadar, 74th, and Kuli Yar Khan, Subadar Bahadur, 9th Regiment of Native Infantry.

PETITION of Mirza Moghal. No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Your exalted Majesty may keep your mind free from every dread of the enemy. Your slave has personally been staying in the batteries with the troop for two days, and where the batteries of the infidels were, there they are still. They have made no advance. If their batteries had advanced very considerably, they must have come into the city. The whole army is prepared to slay the infidels, and an attack is about being made immediately. Through your Majesty’s prestige, the batteries will be speedily taken; and as some of the soldiers come into your Majesty’s presence, and report what they have heard, and not what they have seen, pray do not believe their statements; but be fully assured that so long as there is life in the frames of your slaves, no harm shall reach your Majesty. Beyond this, matters are in the dispensation of God. Your slave is not neglectful. Let it be known to your Majesty that he stays personally in the batteries. Petition of the slave Zohur-ud-din.

Petition of Ghiulam Mirza Husein, Risaldar 18th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry.
No date.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

Respectfully showeth,—That your slave's forefathers and ancestors were, from antiquity, the servants of your Majesty; and all such dignities and distinctions as were conferred on them by your Majesty's illustrious house are on record in the royal archives. The day that the sun of your Majesty's dominion and power suffered eclipse, that same day desolation and ruin came to your slave's prospects and fortunes. Left destitute of option, he consented to serve the infidels, and accordingly continued 55 years in the rank of a risaldar. Hearing the fame of your Majesty's auspicious accession at Peshawur, where my regiment is still stationed, after a thousand difficulties I obtained leave from the commanding officer, and have now presented myself at your Majesty's door, having left all my property, worth thousands of rupees, with the regiment, in consequence of the displeasure of the English. Besides the loss of the property thus abandoned, your slave has suffered the following other losses: one house, recently built by him at an outlay of 5,500 rupees, and five old houses, worth 3,000 rupees, were razed to the ground on account of the railway, and a bill for 3,500 rupees on the Gurgaon treasury, which your slave despatched before leaving the regiment, was never cashed, owing to the disturbances, the treasury itself indeed having ceased to exist. Moreover, on the way, the rajah of Patiala (doomed to banishment from God's sanctuary) had your slave plundered from hand to hand of all the property, such as cattle, tents, and marqueses which he had with him; so completely did he do this, that your slave has not a horse left fit to ride. Having, ten days ago, presented himself at your Majesty's door, he now submits this petition, and prays that he may receive the distinction of being attached to some force, or of being appointed to some district, so that he may efficiently and carefully discharge the duties which may be conferred on him. In consequence of your slave's having become a travelling carriage drawn by bullocks, servants, &c., his daily expenses are seven or eight rupees. Considering it necessary, I have detailed every particular. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of Ghiulam Mirza Husein, risaldar of the 18th Regiment, resident of the district Gurgaon, subdivision of district Palwal, village of Saadatnagar. Seal of "Syed Ghiulam Mirza Husein, 1256."

To the King! Shelter of the World!

We slaves, 50 men of the constabulary force, who were stationed over the gaol at Meerut, having come thence to your royal presence, are now discharging all such duties as are assigned to us, by the orders of the commander-in-chief Bahadar. Your army is now about to leave for Meerut, and 16 of our number are anxiously eager to go and fight in its company.

(Handwritten notes and signs are present, indicating personal correspondences and orders.)
Question.—Did this man, Hasan Askari, pretend to possess miraculous powers, or to be able to foretell future events?

Answer.—He used to interpret dreams, and also foretell coming events, and professed to be inspired.

Question.—Do you know whether he ever predicted any thing relative to the war which was then being waged between the English and the King of Persia?

Answer.—Not while the war between the British and Persians was going on; but two years ago he got 400 rupees from the prisoner, which were given to a man, who it was said was going to Mecca; but it afterwards transpired that he had not gone on the Mecca pilgrimage, but had proceeded to the King of Persia. The man’s name was Sidi Kambur; he was an Abyssinian, and I suppose came from Abyssinia.

Question.—Do you know why it was given out that this man was going to Mecca, when his real destination was to the King of Persia?

Answer.—I cannot account for the deception. I was told by one of the court spies, by Jattu or Jat Mall, that Hasan Askari had sent this man to Persia instead of Mecca, and on making inquiries from some of the court servants, I found this information was correct.

Question.—Did you ever hear of what was the object of this man’s mission to Persia?

Answer.—No; but I heard from Kuli Khan and Basant, two of the king’s body servants, that Hasan Askari had given Sidi Kambur some papers at night-time, attested with the king’s seal, and sent him off to Persia.

Question.—Was the war between the Persians and British frequently the subject of conversation at the Delhi palace, and did the king appear much interested in the issue of it?

Answer.—No, it was not particularly the subject of conversation; the native newspapers coming into the palace used to contain particulars of its progress, and the king never seemed to me to evince any marked interest either one way or the other.

Question.—Did this war, among the Mussulman population of Delhi generally, excite much interest, and was it looked upon as a religious war?

Answer.—No, the Mussulmans of Delhi are Sunnis, and those of Persia are Shiites; the former did not consequently take much interest in the war.

Question.—Are you aware whether in March last, viz., about ten months ago, the king gave Hasan Askari 20 gold mohurs for any particular purpose?

Answer.—He used to give him money; but I don’t know on what account, or on what particular occasion.

Question.—Have you ever heard of any men being sent from here to Constantinople in company with a caravan going to Mecca?

Answer.—No; I never heard of any men being sent to Constantinople on any occasion.

Question.—Do you know any one at Delhi under the title of Muhammad Darwesh?

Answer.—No, I do not.

Question.—Was there any document purporting to bear the seal of the King of Persia pasted up on the Jama Masjid, or other part of the city of Delhi, a few months prior to the outbreak?

Answer.—Yes, a few months before the outbreak, I heard that a paper purporting to be a proclamation from the King of Persia, was pasted at the Jama Masjid.

Question.—Did you ever here how the paper came there?

Answer.—No, but I heard the contents were such as would have been written by the sect of Mahomedans called Shiites.

Question.—Was it generally supposed that the document was a genuine one?

Answer.—People were not certain about its authenticity; they generally seemed to doubt it.

Question.—What was the purport of the document?

Answer.—I heard that it exhorted all classes of Mahomedans to set aside their sectarian differences, and to combine as one body of Mahomedans at the present time, and be ready to fight under the same banner, should there be any cause for so doing.

Question.—Did not this document create a great discussion and sensation in the city?

Answer.—No, not to any very great extent.

Question.—Did you hear this document talked of in the palace, or by the prisoner?

Answer.—The prisoner never spoke of it before me; but I heard it alluded to by a few other persons in the palace.

Question.—Did the annexation of Oudh by the Company cause much feeling of dissatisfaction among the Mussulman population of Delhi?

Answer.—No, it caused no dissatisfaction whatever: on the contrary, the Mussulmans of Delhi were very much pleased with it, as the people of Lucknow being Shiites, had killed Moulaee Amir Ali, who was a Syad and a Sunni.

Question.—Were any other notices or warnings pasted up on the Jama Masjid a short time before the outbreak, intimating dissatisfaction on the part of the Mussulmans?

Answer.—I don’t recollect any.

Question.—Did the native newspapers at Delhi, any time before the rebellion, urge the necessity or propriety of a religious war against the English?

Answer.—No, they never did; but such been done the Government officer would have noticed it.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

A U T O G R A P H ORDER by the King, in Pencil (partially unintelligible).

Bakht Ali's request is accepted, but as yet no one has been paid except from the receipts of some places. So long as all cannot be paid their regular allowances no single individual will receive anything.

Paper marked A. is now produced, enclosed in its original envelope, on which is the Delhi post-office stamp, proving that it was posted at Delhi on the 26th of March 1857, and another stamp of the Agra post-office proves that it was duly received there on the 27th of March 1857. The Judge Advocate explains that this important document was found among the papers of the late Mr. Colvin, Lieutenant-governor at Agra. The translation is now read, and entered as follows:—

TRANSLATION of a Petition from Muhammad Darwesh to his Honour the Lieutenant-governor, North Western Provinces, dated 24th, posted at Delhi 25th, and received at the Agra post-office, 27th March 1857.

NOURISHER of the poor! May your prosperity continue! Your highness! The arrangements for the despatch of letters from the King of Delhi to the King of Persia, through the Pir-zada Hasan Askari, have been stated in a former petition, and must have come to your knowledge. I, who am a mendicant of itinerant habits, have since learned, for a certainty, that two men with letters from the King of Delhi through the said Hasan Askari, proceeded about three or four months ago towards Constantinople, in company with a caravan going to Mecca. Hasan Askari has now assured the King of Delhi that he has certain information that the prince royal of Persia has fully taken possession of and occupied Bushire, and that he has entirely expelled the Christians, or rather has not left one alive there, and has taken many of them prisoners; and that very soon indeed, the Persian army will advance by the way of Candahar and Cabul towards Delhi. He told the king also, that his Majesty was altogether too careless about corresponding with the King of Persia. The king then gave Hasan Askari 20 gold mohurs, and requested him speedily to despatch letters to Persia, and directed him to give the gold mohurs to the man who shall take the letters, for the expenses of his journey. Hasan Askari accordingly took the money, and returned to his house, and has prepared four men to carry the letters, making them assume the coloured garments of religious mendicants; and it is reported that they will leave for Persia in a day or two. The petitioner has not been able to ascertain their names. In the palace, but more especially in the portion of it constituting the personal apartments of the king, the subject of conversation night and day, is the early arrival of the Persians. Hasan Askari has, moreover, impressed the king with the belief that he has learned, through a divine revelation, that the dominion of the King of Persia will, to a certainty, extend to Delhi, or rather over the whole of Hindustan, and that the splendour of the sovereignty of Delhi will again revive, as the sovereign of Persia will bestow the crown on the king. Throughout the palace, but particularly to the king, this belief has been the cause of great rejoicing, so much so, that prayers are offered and vows are made, while at the same time Hasan Askari has entered upon the daily performance, at an hour and a half before sunset, of a course of proprietary ceremonies, to expedite the arrival of the Persians and the expulsion of the Christians. It has been arranged, that every Thursday, several trays of victuals, wheat, meal, oil, money in copper coin, and cloth, should be sent by the king in aid of these ceremonies; and they are accordingly brought to Hasan Askari. Some of the higher functionaries of the government, drawn into a faith in this man by his frauds and deceiving arts, are in the habit of visiting his house, and consider his words and actions entitled to the greatest reliance. Where would be the use in my naming these traitors? May the Almighty God confound the enemies of the Government! Your petitioner keeps learning these matters from certain of his friends who have admission to the presence of this King of Delhi, and who are moreover in the habit of visiting Hasan Askari also. Acts of good will, I have communicated the above particulars. It rests in the province of the ever-enduring government to make necessary and effectual arrangements. Petition of the well-wisher Muhammad Darwesh. Dated 24th March 1857. Seal of “Fakir Muhammad Darwesh.”

Witness examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Did you know a man at Delhi, of the name of Mohammad Hasan Askari, a priest by descent?

Answer.—Yes, I did; he lived near the Delhi Gate, and used to visit the king very frequently.

Question.—How long ago is it since you saw him?

Answer.—I saw him last some twenty days before the English troops re-took Delhi.

Question.—Do you know where he went to, or what became of him?

Answer.—No, I do not.

Question.—At what time were his visits so frequent to the king, and do you know about what time he first introduced to the king's presence?

Answer.—He was first introduced about four years ago. A daughter of the king became a disciple of his, and she spoke so highly of his sanctity that the king employed him during his illness to pray for him, and send him charms to effect his recovery; and within the last two or three years his visits to the king became very frequent. This daughter used to live at the Delhi Gate, in a house adjoining Hasan Askari, and it was commonly reported that she was also his mistress.

FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

Paper marked A. is now read in the original Persian by the interpreter.
The Court at 4 p.m. adjourns till 11 a.m. to-morrow.

SEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Wednesday, 3 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at 11 a.m., in the hall of special audience, in the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of yesterday.
The President, Members, Interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-General are all present.
The prisoner is brought into court attended by his assistant Ghabal Abbas.

Ahsan Ulla Khan, physician, is recalled into court, and is examined on his former affirmation.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—You have heard the petition of Muhammad Darvesh read; do you know anything of the trays of food, wheat-meal, oil, money in copper coin, and cloth said to have been sent by the king in aid of the ceremonies performed by Hasan Askari?
Answer.—Yes, all these things were usually sent; but I do not know that they were sent for the special purpose mentioned in the petition.

Question.—You have mentioned that Jat Mall was one of the court spies, did the king pay him for news given?
Answer.—No, he was not a servant of the king; he was news-writer on the part of the British Government.

Question.—How was it then that you came to get secret information from him, and how, being known as Government news-writer, was it that this man was entrusted with such a secret?
Answer.—Jat Mall used to go about the palace collecting all sorts of news, and having heard the matter, asked me what I knew of it, at which time I was quite ignorant of the subject, and it was only subsequently that I heard it confirmed.

The witness withdraws.

Jat Mall, formerly news-writer to the Lieutenant-governor at Agra, is called into court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Did you know a man of the name of Hasan Askari here?
Answer.—Yes, I did.

Question.—Was he frequently in attendance on the prisoner?
Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Relate what you know of his transactions with the king?
Answer.—He used to come and repeat invocations over the king, and after praying, breathe on him; he used also to profess to be possessed of miraculous gifts from heaven, the gift of prophecy, the power of interpreting dreams, i.e.,—[The prisoner here voluntarily declares his belief that Hasan Askari did really possess the powers here attributed to him.]

—Hasan Askari used to declare that he was frequently audibly addressed from heaven; he used to come daily to the prisoner at various hours just as he was sent for, and frequently used to come uninvited—especially in the evening, when he would have secret audiences with the king.

Question.—Did you ever here any particular dream which this man Hasan Askari interpreted to the king?
Answer.—Yes, about the time that the Persian forces came to Haidarabad, I heard that Hasan Askari communicated one of his own dreams to the king to the effect that he had seen a hurricane approaching from the west, which was followed by a great flood of water devastating the country; that it passed over, and that he noticed that the king suffered no inconvenience from it, but was borne up over the flood seated on his couch. The way in which Hasan Askari interpreted this dream was, that the King of Persia with his army would annihilate the British power in the East, would restore the king to his ancient throne and reinaugurate him in his kingdom, and at the same time the infidels, meaning the British, would be all slaughtered.

Question.—Do you know whether, through the means of this man Hasan Askari, letters were sent to the King of Persia or communications kept up with him?
Answer.—Yes, I do know that letters used to be sent. About a year and a half or two years ago, a kadish was going to Mecca. A man of the name of Sidi Kambáar who was chief of the Abyssinians in the palace, asked permission to accompany it as a pilgrim. This was granted, and according to the custom on such occasions, he was given a year's pay in advance, and it was said at the time that according to a usage common to the Mahomedans, the prisoner had sent a petition, addressed to God, to be posted up on his account on the walls of the shrine at Mecca. After some eight or nine days, I heard that Sidi Kambár's going to Mecca was only a pretence, and that in reality he had started direct for Persia with letters from the King of Delhi to the King of Persia. I heard this from Khwaja Bashar, a messenger of the King's and from one of the prisoner's armed personal attendants whose name I do not remember. I communicated this to Captain Douglas with this information at the time, who said it was a very serious business, and directed me to make every possible inquiry about it, because such correspondence on the part of the King of Delhi with the King of Persia was interdicted. I accordingly asked Ahsan Ulla Khan, the physician, the particulars, as he was fully in-trusted with the direction of all private matters that required to be written. Ahsan Ulla Khan denied having any information on this subject, and declared that if anything of the kind had happened, it was without his knowledge. I communicated this to Captain Douglas, and still continued my inquiries, and some 20 days afterwards I learned, I forget now from whom, that Haider Husen, commandant of the prisoner's artillery, and Hasan Askari, had some letters written, and having them authenticated, in some way, had them despatched to Persia by Sidi Kambur. I communicated this to Captain Douglas, and explained to him that as it was known that the circumstance had reached his ears, the people about the prisoner were on their guard in speaking of it, and that therefore I could elicit nothing further. I also suggested to Captain Douglas that arrangements might be made for intercepting Sidi Kambur beyond Lahore. He, however, replied that there could be no certainty as to which route he had taken, and said it would be useless to take any steps about it.

Question.—Was the subject of the war with Persia much talked of by the king and those about the palace?

Answer.—Yes, it was a frequent subject of conversation both in the palace and in the city.

Question.—Do you know whether it was talked of and referred to in the light of a religious war or one through which the Mahomedans of this city were to be restored to power?

Answer.—Yes, that was the general impression throughout the country, but some who were better informed knew and used to say, that the King of Persia was not by any means able to cope with the English.

Question.—Do you know whether any communications were ever attempted or made from the prisoner or others in his confidence to the native officers or sepoys of the Company's army?

Answer.—No, I never heard of any communication originating with the prisoner or his confidential agents, except in one instance about 34 years ago, when some 10 or 12 Mahomedans on one occasion, and four or five on another, came to the prisoner, offering to become his disciples, a request which the prisoner complied with. This had not gone far when the late Sir Theophilus Metcalfe heard of it, and immediately took measures to check the practice.

Question.—Was the annexation of Oudh by the Company much discussed by the King or the inmates of the palace, and if so, what was the light in which they viewed it?

Answer.—No, I only heard the annexation spoken of twice,—once when the troops were going down towards Cawnpore, on which occasion the prisoner asked Mr. Fraser and Captain Douglas if Oudh was to be annexed. They both stated that they had no information on the point; but about a month after it was reported generally that the annexation had taken place.

Question.—Did Hasan Askari ever predict any things as to the king's length of life, or his future success against the English?

Answer.—Yes, he told the king that he had assigned 20 years of his own life to prolong that of the king, but I never heard that he predicted such success against the English beyond what I have mentioned as the interpretation of his dream.

Question.—Did you ever hear anything talked of in the palace about the centenary of the battle of Plassey, or was there any prophecy that the English rule would terminate at the end of 100 years from its commencement?

Answer.—No, I never heard of it.

Question.—Were you aware that the regiments of the East India Company at Delhi were in any way dissatisfied before they broke out into mutiny?

Answer.—There was an evident feeling of dissatisfaction among them from the little I could observe myself passing in and out of the palace. Some 20 or 25 days before the outbreak, the sepoys used to talk among themselves about the burning of the buildings at Ambala, coupling the circumstance with the greased cartridges, and avowing their determination not to use them.

Question.—Was this subject, viz., the dissatisfaction of the sepoys, discussed in the palace?

Answer.—Yes, the burning of the houses, and the general dissatisfaction of the troops, on account of the greased cartridges, used to be commonly spoken of in the palace; but I never heard it referred to by or before the king. I heard a few days before the outbreak from some of the sepoys of the gate of the palace, that it had been arranged in case greased cartridges were pressed upon them, that the Meerut troops were to come here, where they would be joined by the Delhi troops, and it was said that this compact had been arranged through some native officers, who went over on court martial duty to Meerut.

Question.—Did you mention or report this to any one?

Answer.—No, it was a military matter, and I did not like to speak about it; my reports were all confined to subjects immediately connected with the king.

Question.—Were you here when the mutinous troops came from Meerut?

Answer.—I was at my own house in Delhi when I heard that some of the cavalry from Meerut had killed the toll collector at the Salimpur Bridge, and burnt the toll-house. I, however, did not credit the report, and went on writing my news-letter. Having completed it, it, I came to the palace, and I then learned that Captain Douglas, Mr. Fraser, Mr. Hutchison, the magistrate, and Mr. Nixon, the head clerk of the Commissioner’s Office, had gone in the direction of the Calcutta Gate, to make arrangements against the mutineers. I con-ssequently followed them, and there saw that they had the Calcutta Gate, viz., the one nearest to the bridge of boats, closed. While occupied there, some one happened to report that the mutineers had entered the city by the Zinat-ul-Masjid Gate, and were then in Daryá Ganj, and had already fired the sacking bungalow, and certainly the smoke was then visible. This was about eight o’clock in the morning, and just afterwards I saw three of the company’s cavaly coming from the direction of Daryá Ganj, pursuing at a gallop some European gentlemen, at whom one of them fired his pistol as they came up, but missed his aim. This gentleman rode on in the direction of the magazine, and escaped. Just then Mr. Fraser took a musket from one of the constabulary guard at the gate, and shot one of the troopers; the other troopers then shot the horse of the man who had been killed, and Mr. Fraser then got into his buggy, accompanied by Captain Douglas and Mr. Hutchinson, both on foot, proceeding in the direction of the palace. Mr. Hutchinson had by this time been wounded in the right arm just above the elbow, by a pistol shot from one of the troopers, and while Mr. Fraser was proceeding to the palace some more troopers had arrived, and one of these coming up behind fired his pistol, but missed Mr. Fraser. At this time Bakhtawar, who was an orderly chaparrass of Captain Douglas, was seated behind the buggy of Mr. Fraser. Captain Douglas, seeing that he was surrounded by these troopers, jumped into the fort ditch, and in doing so fell upon some loose stones, and was much hurt in consequence. The troopers by this time began to disperse in pursuit of the Europeans in all directions, so getting an opportunity, Bakhtawar and other native government servants took Captain Douglas out of the fort ditch in a state of insensibility, and carried him to his apartments over the palace gates. When he recovered his speech and senses a little, he issued instructions to do. Mr. Fraser, who was walking in the covered way below adjoining the Lahore Gate of the palace, accompanied by some gentlemen who had only that morning arrived from Calcutta, directed Pran, messenger, to go and procure two cannons from the king. Pran had just left on this errand, and Mr. Fraser had just come under the centre opening of the covered way, when by this time a great crowd of men and boys of all ages having collected, began clapping their hands as a kind of insolent bravado at what was occurring. Mr.
Fraser, seeing such marked feelings of hostility, began to return to Captain Douglas’ quarters, and as he reached the foot of the stairs, Haji, lapidary, raised his sword to make a cut at him. Mr. Fraser, who had a sheathed sword in his hand, turned sharply round, and thrust at him, with the sword in its sheath, saying to the havidar of the gate guard, “What kind of behaviour? This is the manner in which the havidar made a show of driving off the crowd; but no sooner was Mr. Fraser’s back turned, than the havidar nodded with his head to the lapidary, to signify to him that now he should renew his attack. The lapidary, thus encouraged, rushed upon Mr. Fraser, and inflicted a deep and mortal wound on the right side of his neck. Mr. Fraser at once fell, when three other men of the names of Khalak Dad, a Cabuli Pathan, Moghal Beg or Moghal Jan, and Sheik Din Muhammad, who had been confederates in an hotel-house adjoining, rushed out and cut him with their swords over the head, face, and chest till he was quite dead. Sheik Din Muhammad was an armed orderly in the king’s pay, and Khalak Dad and Moghal Beg were also armed retainers of Mahbub Ali Khan, the king’s prime minister. These three men, after having despatched Mr. Fraser, followed by a crowd of others, ran up stairs to Captain Douglas’ apartments over the palace gate. After they had arrived at the second landing place, a servant of Government, unable to attend on Captain Douglas, by name Makhan, told him of the circumsance, and was ordered to close the staircase. While this was being done on the north side of the apartment, numbers of the crowd rushed in by a corresponding staircase on the southern side, and came down and forced open the door which Makhan had closed, and then gave admission to the armed crowd, headed by the three men already mentioned as having cut Mr. Fraser when he had fallen. These people successively murdered Captain Douglas. Mr. Hutchinson the collector, the Reverend Mr. Jennings, Miss Jennings, and Miss Clifford, all of whom were in Captain Douglas’ apartments. The stranger who had arrived that morning from Calcutta contrived to get out on the ramparts of the palace wall, and had gone unobserved as far as Mirza Kochak’s house near the Delhi Gate of the palace, when he was fired at by somebody, and wounded in the shoulder. On this he retraced his steps, and was eventually cut down at the foot of the southern staircase leading to Captain Douglas’ apartments. All these murders were committed in about a quarter of an hour. The details, as given here, I collected from Makhan, Bakhtawar, Pran and Kisan, servants of the Government in attendance at the time on Captain Douglas; but of the circumstances up to the death of Mr. Fraser, I was myself an eye-witness.

It being 4 p.m. the Court adjourns till Friday, the 6th instant, at 11 a.m.
Friday, 5th February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning in the Hall of Special Audience in the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of Wednesday.

The President, members, interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner, attended by his counsel, is brought into court.

Question.—After the Europeans in Captain Douglas’ apartments had been murdered, what did the populace or soldiery proceed to do?

Answer.—Immediately after the murder of the Europeans, I went to my home in the city, and did not come to the palace again for several days.

Question.—When did the king assume the reins of government? and was a royal salute fired on the occasion?

Answer.—He began to take possession of the government stores, viz. the gunpowder outside the city, and all the ordnance, arms, &c. in the magazine on the second or third day after the arrival of the Meerut troops, and in a week or so, began generally to issue royal orders to the different departments, and to receive petitions on government business. A salute of 21 guns was certainly fired during the night of the 11th of May; but I am not certain what was the occasion of it. Some said it was the salute to the colours of the regiments come from Meerut, and some said that the prisoner had gone into Salimgarh, and the guns had been fired as a salute to him.

Question.—When was Mirza Moghal appointed commander-in-chief?

Answer.—He was virtually commander-in-chief from seven or eight days after the outbreak, inasmuch as the native officers used to go to consult and confer with him, and receive their orders from him; but it was not till a month had elapsed, that he was publicly proclaimed and received his dress of honour. On the same occasion the other sons of the king and grandsons of the king were severally made generals and colonels, each receiving their dress of honour.

Question.—What part did Hasan Askari act during the time of the rebellion; was he one of the king’s chief counsellors?

Answer.—He continued in the same position with reference to the king as formerly, and did not appear to take any such active part in the rebellion as to be particularly remarkable. A daughter of the prisoner was avowedly a disciple of Hasan Askari; but people generally said that there was an improper intimacy between them.

Question.—Do you know whether any ladders were taken from the palace for the purpose of scaling the magazine?

Answer.—I heard that scaling ladders were used at the magazine; but I don’t know where they were brought from.

Question.—Did you ever hear of the circulation of chapatis about the country some months before the outbreak; and if so, what was supposed to be the meaning of this?

Answer.—Yes, I did hear of the circumstance. Some people said that it was a propagatory observance to avert some impending calamity; others that they were circulated by the Government to signify that the population throughout the country would be compelled to use the same food as the Christians, and thus be deprived of their religion; while others again said, that the chapatis were circulated to make it known that Government was determined to force Christianity on the country by interfering with their food, and intention of it was thus given, that they might be prepared to resist the attempt.

Question.—Is sending such articles about the country a custom among the Hindus or Mussulmans; and would the meaning be at once understood without any accompanying explanation?

Answer.—No, it is not by any means a custom; I am 50 years old, and never heard of such a thing before.

Question.—Did you ever hear that any message was sent with the chapatis?

Answer.—No, I never heard of any.

Question.—Were these chapatis chiefly circulated by Mahomedans or Hindus?

Answer.—They were circulated indiscriminately, without reference to either religion, among the peasantry of the country.

Question.—When did you first return to the palace after the 11th of May?

Answer.—I heard a report in the city that the Europeans were to be slaughtered: I don’t know the exact date, but it was some seven or eight days after the outbreak; and I got into the palace among the crowd. This was about eight o’clock in the morning. On my reaching the first court-yard of the Palace, I saw the Europeans seated in a row, with their hands tied, behind their backs along the edge of the square reservoir, and also along the small canal leading to it; there were men, women and children. Shortly after I arrived one of the Meerut cavalry mutineers fired a pistol at them; he was standing at the same distance on horseback; the shot missed the Europeans, and hit one of the king’s sepoys, who was standing some way off behind them; this man died in consequence, and, owing to this accident, the crowd decided on killing the Europeans with swords. The king’s retainers, as well as some of the mutineers, drew their swords to carry out this resolve; but I had not nerve to stay and witness the execution, so went home, and subsequently heard that they had all been slaughtered by the king’s servants and the mutinous soldiery.

Question.—Were any guns fired as a token of joy on the occasion?
Answer.—No, I heard none.

Question.—Did the prisoner give his consent to the murder of these Europeans?
Answer.—On the first day of the soldiery making a request that the Europeans should be executed, the king refused his sanction; but it was said that on the day following Bassant Ali Khan, a personal attendant of the king, and a man notorious for his savage disposition, went among the soldiers and instigated them to insist on the murder of the Europeans. They did so, and the king ordered the Europeans to be given up to them; at least this is what I subsequently heard at my own house. On the morning of the massacre, Bassant Ali Khan is stated to have stood in the court-yard of the hall of special audience, and to have called out loudly, that the king had sanctioned the slaughter of the Europeans, and that the personal armed retainers of the prisoner were directed to go and assist in carrying it into effect.

Question.—In your opinion, could the king, had he been anxious to do so, have saved the Europeans, especially the women and children?
Answer.—I heard in the city that the king did wish to save the Europeans, particularly the women and children, but that he was overruled by the violence of the soldiery, and had not the firmness to oppose them.

Question.—Was there not ample room for the women and children in the apartments occupied by the females of the king’s establishments, and would not the European women and children have been safe there?
Answer.—Certainly there was abundance of room; 500 people might have been concealed, and been safe there; there are also several secret recesses and crypts, which, had the rebels even dared to violate the sanctity of the women’s apartments, would have escaped all search.

Question.—Were you present in Delhi during the whole siege by the British?
Answer.—I continued in Delhi for three months and a quarter after the outbreak, when the king’s people began to search for servants of the British Government on suspicion of sending intelligence to the English. I then made my escape from the city, and did not return till some time after the city had been re-taken.

Question.—Are you aware whether any other Europeans were murdered after the massacre of those in the palace?
Answer.—No, I don’t know that there were any left to be murdered; but before the massacre above described, I heard that some 50 or 50 had defended themselves in some underground recess, and being starved out, were killed about two or three days after the outbreak.

Question.—Did you ever hear the sepoyz allege any other ground of complaint besides that of the greased cartridges?
Answer.—No, I never did.

Question.—How did the sepoyz generally speak of the Company’s Government during the siege?
Answer.—The soldiery generally talked of the Government with bitter complaints of the attempt on their caste and religion, and always avowed their intention to kill Europeans whenever they met them. Those, however, who were wounded, contrasted the neglect with which they were treated in Delhi with the care they would have experienced under similar circumstances had they been fighting for the English.

Question.—Do you think there was any difference between the Mahomedans and Hindus in regard to their feelings for or against the English Government?
Answer.—Yes, certainly; the Mahomedans as a body were well pleased at the overthrow of the British Government, while the merchants and respectable tradesmen among the Hindus regretted it.

Question.—Was there no difference of feeling on this point among the Mahomedan and Hindu soldiery; were both equally bitter against the English Government?
Answer.—The general feeling throughout the army was the same, both among the Hindus and Mahomedans.

Question.—Do you think the arrival of the soldiery from Meerut was expected in the palace?
Answer.—Yes, they were expected. Letters came in from Meerut on Sunday, bringing intelligence that 82 soldiers had been imprisoned, and that a serious disturbance was to take place in consequence. Owing to this the guards at the gate of the palace made no secret of their intentions, but spoke openly of what they expected to occur, which was that some of the troops after mutinying at Meerut would come over to Delhi.

Question.—Have you any means of knowing whether this was communicated or made known to the prisoner at this time?
Answer.—No, I have not.

Question.—Can you judge from any circumstances that occurred either at the time or afterwards, that the prisoner had any foreknowledge of the coming of the troops from Meerut?
Answer.—Nothing came under my observation either before or afterwards from which I could draw such a conclusion.
EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE THE COURT APPOINTED

Cross-examined by Prisoner.

Question.—You stated in your evidence the day before yesterday, that a gentleman who tried to make his escape in the direction of Mirza Kochak’s house, was wounded by a shot there; do you know whether Mirza Kochak was in his house at the time?

Answer.—No, I can’t speak to particulars of this kind.

Question.—Do you know whether the people who murdered Mr. Fraser were encouraged to do so by me, or were they instigated to the act by the army?

Answer.—As far as I know, the king had not had time to hear of the murder before it was committed; the rioters were sufficiently disposed to murder, and being encouraged by the army, perpetrated it at once.

Question.—Did you hear that I expressed a wish to have the corpses of the murdered Europeans removed, and that the soldiery would not allow me?

Answer.—No, I have no knowledge on the subject.

Question.—Did you know whether I gave the order to my armed retainers to assist in slaying the Europeans, or did Basant Ali Khan falsely give out that I had done so?

Answer.—I can’t say.

Examined by Court.

Question.—At the time you saw the Europeans bound before being slaughtered, did you observe that any of the king’s confidential servants or officers were present?

Answer.—No, I saw none of these in the court-yard; but Mirza Moghal, one of the king’s sons, was standing on the roof of his house overlooking the court-yard, and at the same time other sons and two grandsons of the king were standing on their houses, apparently for the purpose of witnessing the massacre.

Question.—Did you observe that any of these made any attempt to save the women and children from being murdered, or otherwise?

Answer.—No, they appeared to be spectators. It had been determined that the massacre was to take place, and there was no necessity for their urging the execution of it.

The witness withdraws.

Captain Forrest, Assistant Commissary of Ordnance, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi on the 11th of last May?

Answer.—I was.

Question.—Did you on that occasion see any of the mutinous soldiery from Meerut?

Answer.—I did. I first saw them, viz., some cavalry in front (nearly a regiment), followed by the 11th and 20th regiments of Native Infantry crossing the bridge on the road from Meerut. They were coming up in military formation, I would say in subdivisions of companies with fixed bayonets and sloped arms, at about nine o’clock. I did not see any of them previous to this; but I was informed that a small portion of the cavalry had arrived on the Delhi side of the bridge much earlier, viz., about seven o’clock. I was in the magazine at the time I saw the troops passing over the bridge, having gone there a short time before in consequence of a communication which Sir Theophilus Metcalfe made to me, to the effect that the mutineers were expected in from Meerut, and he wished me to get two guns out of the magazine, so as to place them in position, to sweep the bridge, and prevent the mutineers from crossing; but there were no cattle to draw out the guns, neither were there any artillerists to man them, so Lieutenant Willoughby, concerned with me in thinking the best plan would be to close the magazine gates, and defend the place as long as we could; and we thought that if we could hold the magazine till the evening, the European troops would be certain to arrive from Meerut and relieve us. Between the hours of nine and ten, a subadar of the 38th Native Infantry, who was commanding the magazine guard outside, informed me through an aperture, that the King of Delhi had sent a guard to take possession of the magazine, and to bring all the Europeans there up to his palace, and that if they did not consent to this, none of them were to be allowed to leave the magazine. I did not see the guard at this time; but I saw the man who had brought this message. He was a well-dressed Mussulman. We told the subadar of the guard that he was to pay no attention to any orders he might receive from any one, unless it was Lieutenant Willoughby or myself; but we held no communication with, nor did we deign any answer to the man who had brought the above message. Shortly after the above, a native officer in the king’s service arrived with a strong guard of the king’s own soldiers in their uniform, and told the above-mentioned subadar and the non-commissioned officers that he was sent down by the king to relieve them of duty. The same orders were given to the subadar by myself to pay no attention to such authority. At this time the native officer who had come down with a strong detachment of the king’s soldiers, placed guards of about 12 men under a non-commissioned officer over each gate of the magazine. These men took up their posts in regular military style, posted their arms, received their orders, and behaved altogether like regular soldiers. They were all in the full uniform of the king. This was some time between ten and eleven in the morning, about an hour after which the door-keeper on the outside of the gate called out that he wished to speak either to Lieutenant Willoughby or myself. We both approached the gate together, when the man and sentry at the gate both informed us that the King of Delhi had sent people to carry away the whole of the Government stores there on the outside of the gate, and that they were unable to prevent them.
To this neither Lieutenant Willoughby or myself gave any answer; but on looking through the gate we could distinctly see the stores being removed. The men who were employed in this work were common labourers, superintended and controlled by a guard of the king's soldiers in their own regular uniform. Shortly after this the subadar of our guard again expressed a wish to see either Lieutenant Willoughby or myself; we accordingly went to him. He told us that a messenger had come from the king to say that if we didn't immediately open the gates, that he would have scaling ladders sent down to scale the walls, and these ladders shortly afterwards arrived, and were placed against the south-eastern turret or corner of the magazine. The native establishments of the magazine observing this immediately ascended by a sloped shed on the inside of the wall, gained the ladders, and made their escape out of the magazine. This being done, the mutineers without delay ascended the ladders, and commenced attacking us inside the magazine, which they continued to do till half-past three in the evening. As they ascended the ladder they gained admission into the small turret, and as soon as a sufficient number was collected, and were about descending into the magazine, we opened on them with grape from four field pieces, using two at a time, and keeping two loaded in reserve. There was only Mr. Buckley and myself to man these guns. Two guns, however, were placed at the other gate of the magazine double charged, under Sub-conductor Crow and Serjeant Edwards; they remained with lighted matches in their hands, with orders from Lieutenant Willoughby not to fire till the gate was forced. Both these men were killed in the magazine. Another gun was placed on the river face under charge of Conductor Shaw, who escaped to the main guard at the Cashmere Gate, after the magazine was exploded, and was there shot by a sepoy of the 54th N. I. Lieutenants Willoughby and Raynor were active, going from post to post, giving such orders as were required, superintending the defence, and also personally assisting in it. During the time this was going on, Lieutenant Willoughby and myself frequently went to the gate, which was close by, and asked who was leading or commanding the attack, and the same answer was given us on every occasion, viz., a son and a grandson of the king's were present, organizing the attack on us; but the men who ascended the scaling ladders and entered the magazine were all sepoys of the 11th and 20th regiments N. I. Another message, about one o'clock, came in the king's name to say, that if we did not surrender he would mine and blow up a part of the wall, which was known to be weak, and so effect an entrance.

It being four o'clock, the Court adjourns till 11 a. m. to-morrow.

NINTH DAYS PROCEEDINGS.

Saturday, 6th February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day in the Hall of Special Audience in the palace at Delhi.

The President, members, interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas, is brought into court.

Question.—You have narrated what occurred at the magazine up to half-past three o'clock. What ensued after that?

Answer.—About that time we had expended the last rounds of ammunition for the field pieces, and the magazine having been entered in two places, further defence was impossible. Conductor Buckley had been shot in the arm, and I had been hit twice on the head. Lieutenant Willoughby, who commanded in the magazine, had, early in the morning, had arrangements made to enable us to blow up the magazine, should circumstances render such an extreme measure necessary, and now, at half-past three p.m., seeing the moment had arrived to do so, he ordered the preconcerted signal to be made, which was done by Mr. Conductor Buckley turning to where Conductor Scully was standing, and lifting his hat. Conductor Scully seeing this, at once fired the train, and the magazine was blown up that same second with a fearful explosion, killing hundreds of the natives about. Fragments of the building were said to have been thrown half a mile and upwards, and several European women and children who had fled to the magazine were killed and severely injured. Conductor Scully was himself so dreadfully wounded that his final escape was impossible. I saw him after the explosion, but his face and head were so burned and confused that I don't think life could have long remained in him. I have only to add to this, that not one man of the native establishments in the magazine (the Bengalee writer excepted) remained true to us. They all took the first opportunity of escaping with the arms given to them for the purpose of aiding us in the defence of the magazine. Lieutenant Willoughby and myself escaped to the main guard at the Cashmere Gate. Lieutenant Raynor and Mr. Buckley escaped in another direction, and finally reached Meerut; all the remainder were killed either by the explosion or after quitting the magazine. Lieutenant Willoughby was killed two or three days afterwards, on the road to Meerut.
Question.—Did the ladder brought to scale the magazine appear to be new, or made purposely for that object?

Answer.—I could only see a foot of the ladder that reached above the walls, so am unable to answer these points.

Question.—Was there anything unusual in the dress or conduct of any of your native establishment at the magazine before the outbreak, from which it may be inferred that they were cognizant of what was going to occur?

Answer.—I noticed nothing in the dress of the men; but their behaviour for several days previous to the outbreak was insolent and overbearing, especially that of those who were Mahomedanes. Mr. Buckley and I had both remarked this, and spoken to each other about it. On the morning of the 11th May, when I went to the magazine I remarked that the sirdars and durwans were well dressed, better than I had ever seen them before; also the magazine men did not appear in their usual working dress, but were much cleaner. This I remarked at the time to Lieutenant Willoughby, who coincided with me, and said the circumstance had struck him also.

Question.—Have you any reason to suppose that any of your native establishment at the magazine had been in correspondence on the subject of the cartridges with the sepoys of the army?

Answer.—I had no suspicion of such a circumstance while I was at Delhi; but on reaching Meerut, and going into hospital about the 19th of May on account of my wounds, I was asked by the artillery hospital serjeant there (I think his name is Godward), whether there had been a clever native at the head of the magazine establishment at Delhi. I told him there was, and mentioned one in particular, viz. Karim Baksh, who was a man and also a good scholar, capable of writing Persian well. The serjeant then said to me that a native had been to him that morning, and informed him that some one in the magazine at Delhi had been sending circulars to all the native regiments, to the effect that the cartridges prepared in the magazine had been smeared with a composition of fat, and that they were not to believe their European officers, if they said anything in contradiction of it. This man, Karim Baksh, was very active during the time the natives were attacking the magazine, in communicating with them, and I suspected did his whole conduct seem that Lieutenant Willoughby ordered me to remove him from the gate, adding that I was to shoot him if he attempted to return to it. This man has since been hung for his treacherous conduct on that occasion.

Cross-examined by Prisoner.

Question.—What kind of uniform did the men wear whom you say were my soldiers, and went to claim possession of the magazine on my account?

Answer.—They wore a blue dress, with a forage cap, and a small design in brass, of a gun on it; the uniform was such as I have seen for the last 30 years worn by your artillery soldiers, and these men, when asked who they were, with one voice exclaimed that they were your soldiers.

Examined by the Court.

Question.—Have you ever ascertained where the scaling ladders were brought from?

Answer.—No, I have not.

The witness withdraws.

Makkhan, a Mace-bearer of Captain Douglas, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in attendance on Captain Douglas on the 11th of last May?

Answer.—Yes, I was present on that morning at the entrance into Captain Douglas' apartments.

Question.—What did you witness on that occasion?

Answer.—About seven o'clock a cavalry soldier rode up to the Lahore Gate of the palace, and demanded admittance to the interior, which the guard at the gate refused. He however persisted, and a report was immediately made to Captain Douglas, who at once went down to inquire into the matter. Captain Douglas asked the man what he wanted, when he replied that he had mutinied at Meerut, and arriving at Delhi had come to the guard for a drink of water and a pipe. Captain Douglas gave orders to seize him, when he immediately galloped off. Returning from the gate, Captain Douglas was yet in the covered way, when a messenger sent by the king met him, and reported that a number of troopers had arrived, and were collected under the lattices of the palace. Hearing this, Captain Douglas came on at once to the hall of audience, and going to the balcony asked the troopers what they wanted there. One of them replied, "We have mutinied at Meerut, and have come here for justice." Captain Douglas said, "Go to the old fort of Firozahah, and you shall have justice." After this Captain Douglas returned to the Lahore Gate of the palace, where he heard that Mr. Fraser was engaged making arrangements at the Calcutta Gate, accompanied by the principal police officers of the city, and the guard allowed for the protection of the agency, and immediately went on to join Mr. Fraser. I and the chapress present went with him. At the Calcutta Gate there were collected Mr. Fraser, Mr. Hutchinson, and two other gentlemen whose names I do not know. Mr. Fraser was directing the chief native police officer of the city to take two of his sowars and see that there was no laxity in the arrangements at the gates. While he was there engaged, four or five cavalry troopers were seen approaching at full speed, with drawn swords, from the direction of the palace. One of them approached and fired his pistol at Mr. Fraser, who immediately jumped out of his buggy, and Mr. Hutchinson, chapuasy, took a musket from the police guard at the gate, and handed it to his master. The musket was loaded, and Mr. Fraser shot the trooper dead on the spot. This dispersed the man’s comrades, who, however, before making off, wounded Mr. Hutchinson in the arm. An excessive crowd having by this time collected, Captain Douglas jumped into the fort ditch, and was severely hurt in the feet and back by so doing. Mr. Fraser then came to the Lahore Gate of the palace in his buggy, while Captain Douglas and Mr. Hutchinson walked along in the ditch of the fort. On reaching the gate Captain Douglas had to be assisted out, and being considerably hurt, asked to be taken into the room called the Kuliyaat Khana till he should recover a little from the shock he had received. In the meantime, the Reverend Mr. Jennings came down to him, and he and Mr. Hutchinson conveyed him to the apartments over the gate. At this time Mr. Fraser remained below, trying to suppress the disturbance, and while thus engaged, I noticed that Haji, lapidary, cut him down with a tulwar, and almost at the same instant some of the king’s servants cut at him with swords till he was dead. I was at the head of the stairs, and this was perpetrated at the foot of them. One of Mr. Fraser’s murderers was an Abyssinian. After this they made a rush to the upper apartments, when I immediately ran round by another door, and closed the door at the top of the stairs. I was engaged in shutting all the doors when the crowd who had found entrance by the southern stair, having forced one of the doors on that side, came and gave admission to the men who had assisted in murdering Mr. Fraser. These immediately rushed into the apartments where the gentlemen, viz., Captain Douglas, Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Jennings had retired, and attacking them with swords, at once murdered them and the two young ladies. On this I ran down the staircase. As I got to the bottom I was laid hold of by one Mandoh, a bearer in the service of the king, who said, “Tell me where Captain Douglas is; you have concealed him.” He forced me up-stairs with him. “You have yourselves killed the trooper dead in the room where Captain Douglas was, I saw that he was not quite dead. Mandoh perceived this also, hit him with a bludgeon on the forehead, and killed him immediately. I saw the other bodies, including those of the two ladies. Mr. Hutchinson was lying in one room, and the bodies of Captain Douglas, Mr. Jennings, and the two young ladies in another, on the floor, with the exception of that of Captain Douglas, which was on a bed. A gentleman had arrived that morning travelling from Calcutta, and he was killed somewhere in the direction of the Delhi Gate of the palace, he having tried to escape on that side. All the murders were perpetrated within a quarter of an hour after Mr. Fraser’s death, and it was now between nine and ten o’clock, A.M. After the death of the gentlemen, the crowd began plundering their property, and fearing for myself, I ran off to my own house in the city, and never returned to the palace till after the re-capture of the king’s servants.

Question.—Did you accompany Captain Douglas when he went from the covered way in the palace to the hall of special audience, and if so, did he at that time have any interview or conversation with the prisoner?

Answer.—Yes, I accompanied Captain Douglas, following him at a distance of about two paces, and can aver that he had neither interview nor conversation with the king of any kind, and that he returned to his own apartments without having spoken to him at all.

Question.—Can you positively affirm that, from the time Captain Douglas rose in the morning of the 11th of May to the hour of his death that same morning, he had neither interview nor conversation with the prisoner?

Answer.—I can and do positively affirm that he had neither interview nor conversation with the king on the morning in question.

Question.—Did any other servant of Captain Douglas accompany him to the hall of special audience with yourself?

Answer.—Yes, Bakhtawar Singh and Khisan Singh, messengers, were also with us.

Cross-examined by Prisoner.

Question.—Did Captain Douglas, in your hearing, require that the gate under the prisoner’s sitting room should be opened, so that he might go and speak to the mutineers cavalry below?

Answer.—Yes, he did; he said to us, “I shall go down to the mutineers,” and we dissuaded him from doing so.

Question.—Was not the prisoner in the hall of devotion when Captain Douglas passed on to the balcony, and in doing so did not the latter go through the usual form of salutation to the king?

Answer.—Yes, the king was there, and Captain Douglas saluted him at a distance, and passed on, but did not speak to him.

Question.—How far did Captain Douglas pass from the king?

Answer.—About fifteen paces.

Question.—Did you hear the prisoner dissuading Captain Douglas from going down to the troopers standing under the lattices?

Answer.—No, I did not.

Question.—Did any thing pass between Ahsan Ulla Khan and Captain Douglas that morning?

Answer.—Yes, when Captain Douglas returned hurt by his fall, Ahsan Ulla Khan went up to his room. I was not present at the interview, and don’t know what passed between them.

162. K 4

Question.—
Question.—Do you know whether Alsan Ulla Khan went to Captain Douglas of his own accord, or was he sent for?
Answer.—I don’t know.
Question.—When Captain Douglas came to the palace did any conversation take place between him and Alsan Ulla Khan or myself, or any other of the king’s servants?
Answer.—I think not; but I did not observe closely.

The witness withdraws.

It being four o’clock, the Court adjourns till eleven a.m. on the 8th instant.

TENTH DAY’S PROCEEDINGS.

Monday, 8th February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at eleven a.m. in the Hall of Special Audience at the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of Saturday.
The President, members, interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.
The prisoner, attended by his attorney, Ghahan Abbas, is brought into court.

Sir Theophilus Metcalfe is called into court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Some short time before the outbreak in May last, was there any paper stuck up on the walls of the Jama Masjid, purporting to be a proclamation from the King of Persia?
Answer.—Yes; it was a small dirty piece of paper, with a naked sword and shield depicted, one on the right and the other on the left of it, and the purport of it was that the King of Persia was about to visit this country, and he called upon all the faithful followers of the prophet Muhammad to join with him in extirpating the English infidels, and offering landed estates and other large rewards to all who would do so; it was further stated that there were 500 men in Delhi at the time of putting up the placard who were devoted to his interests.
Question.—Was there any allusion in it to the effect that the Shah sect and Sunni sect of Mahomedans should forget their differences, and make common cause against the English?
Answer.—No, I don’t think there was.
Question.—Was the document palpably a false one in purporting to come from the King of Persia?
Answer.—Yes, I think so.
Question.—How long did it remain on the walls of the Jama Masjid?
Answer.—About three hours. It was put up there at night; I don’t know the exact date, but it was about six weeks before the outbreak, and I suppose it may have remained up about three hours; in the morning a concourse of people was collected round it, and on hearing of this, I had it taken down.
Question.—Did it, as far as you are aware of, excite much discussion or interest among the natives of Delhi?
Answer.—No.
Question.—Was any effort made to trace where it came from?
Answer.—None; it was considered altogether too contemptible. Any disaffected person in the city might have put such a paper, and to have made a fuss about it would only have been investing it with undue importance.
Question.—From any other source or cause had you any reason to suppose that about this time there was any usual amount of disloyalty to the English Government among the population of Delhi?
Answer.—No, not among the people of Delhi; but they were perfectly aware of the want of fidelity in the sepoys army, and the subject was frequently discussed. As an instance, it was currently reported, about fifteen days before the outbreak, that an anonymous petition had been presented to the magistrate, stating that the Cashmere Gate of the city would be taken out of the possession of the English. This gate being our chief stronghold in the city, and main connexion with the cantonments of Delhi, it would naturally be the first point seized in any attempt at insurrection in the city, and it was also the only gate at which there was any military guard; the importance of it, therefore, in a strategical point of view, must have been obvious to all. This petition was never received; but the current report about it was indicative of what was then occupying the thoughts of many of the natives. As a further proof of the feeling then existing, a sidi of the king, who was in constant attendance at the palace, secretly urged a risaladar of the 14th irregular cavalry to leave our service, and to take service with the king, telling him, as an inducement to do so, that before the hot weather was over, the Russians would have come to India, and the Government of the English be at an end. The risaladar communicated this to me; his name is Everett. He speaks English, and is partly of European extraction.
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

extraction. He also informed me that about six months before, the King had sent an emissary to Russia. This emissary is now at Belaspur.

Question.—Can you give the Court any information about the chapaties which were circulated from village to village some months before the outbreak, and has it been ascertained how they originated, or what was the purpose of their being circulated?

Answer.—There is nothing but conjecture regarding them; but the first suggestion made by the natives in reference to them was, that they were thus sent about in connexion with some sickness that prevailed; but this was clearly an error, as I took the trouble of ascertaining that these chapaties were never sent into any native states, but were confined always to Government villages; they were spread through only five villages of the Delhi territory, when they were immediately stopped by authority, and they never proceeded further up country. I sent for the men who had brought them from the district of Bulandshahr, and their apology for circulating them was that they believed it to be done by order of the English Government, and that they had received them elsewhere, and had forwarded them on. I believe the meaning of the chapaties was not understood in the Delhi district; but originally they were to be taken to all those who partook of one kind of food, connecting a body of men together in contradistinction to those who lived differently, and had different customs. I think these chapaties originated at Lucknow, and were no doubt meant to sound a note of alarm and preparation, giving warning to the people to stand by one another on any danger menacing them.

Question.—Did you ever hear that the subject of the advance of the Persians upon Herat was much discussed among the natives?

Answer.—Yes, very much so; and frequently in connexion with the idea of Russian aggression upon India. Every native newspaper had, at this time, its correspondent in Cabul, and there was a constant communication kept up with the north, every newspaper having its weekly quota of information from thence.

Question.—Do you know where the sidi who tried to induce Mr. Everett to abandon Government service now is?

Answer.—Yes; he was killed at Arab Serai.

Question.—Can you give the Court any other information relative to any agitation that about this time prevailed among the sepays or native population of Delhi?

Answer.—Yes; I know that about five or six weeks before the outbreak, it was currently reported in the lines of the sepays, and much discussed among them, that 100,000 Russians were coming from the north, and that the Company's Government would be destroyed; in fact the idea of a Russian invasion was universally prevalent.

Question.—Are you aware whether the King of Delhi, his relatives or other adherents, had any secret or treasonable correspondence or communications with the Company's Native Army at any time before the outbreak?

Answer.—No, I cannot speak to any such points.

Question.—Do you know whether the King of Delhi ever sent an emissary or letters to the King of Persia?

Answer.—I have heard that he did, but cannot speak positively.

The witness withdraws.

Hasan Askari, Pirzada, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi at the time of the outbreak, and if so, what was your occupation?

Answer.—Yes, I was at Delhi; my occupation was that of a priest, and on one occasion when the King was sick and had other priests to pray for him, he eventually sent for me. I went through some prayers and afterwards breathed on him, and the King recovering, used afterwards frequently to send for me; but finding this inconvenient, I begged that I might not be called for in future, and the King then promised with an oath that he would send for me only when he should be seriously unwell.

Question.—Did you know a man called Sidi Kambar, a servant of the King?

Answer.—I knew several of the Abyssinians amongst the armed attendants of the King by sight, but I knew by name only two or three of the King's servants; Sidi Kambar was not one of them.

Question.—It has been given in evidence before this Court that you entrusted an Abyssinian of the name of Sidi Kambar, a servant of the King, with letters from the King of Delhi to the King of Persia; what do you know about this?

Answer.—I know nothing of the matter whatever.

Question.—It has been given in evidence that you professed to have the power of prophecy, that you could interpret dreams, that you pretended to have been audibly addressed from Heaven, and also that you claimed miraculous power: to the truth of this the prisoner has himself testified: what have you to say in reference to these subjects?

Answer.—I call God to witness that I never pretended to anything of the kind.

Question.—What made you, as you say, breathe upon the King; did you suppose that your breath had any curative effect?

Answer.—It is written in our book that when a man prays for another and then breathes on him, it is likely to have a beneficial effect.
Question.—Did you ever tell the King that you had had a dream about a hurricane from the west, or any other quarter, coming upon India, devastating the land with a flood, which would bear up the King and annihilate the English?

Answer.—God knows, I never had such a dream, nor did I ever say so; but people from the palace used frequently to come to me, telling me that they had been having dreams of the kind. I told them it was all a fallacy, and that I had no faith in dreams myself.

Question.—When did you leave the city of Delhi, and what has been the reason of your concealing yourself till discovered by the police?

Answer.—When it became generally known that the city was to be carried by assault, it was understood that the inhabitants were required to leave the place, and they began to flock out in crowds. I went out too. I first went out and stayed at Shahr Mirza-ud-din, till told to go away from that also. I next went to the Kuth, and from that to Garhi Harsar, where I fell sick. I also went to other places till I reached Lakhnow, where I heard that a search was being made for me at Gangoth. I accordingly decided on going there on my own accord, and went. On intelligence reaching my brethren there that I was coming, the troopers hearing of my being in the vicinity came out and seized me while I was at my prayers in the shrine of the Imam Sahib.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness withdraws.

Bakhthawar Singh, Chapsaray in the service of the Government, is called into Court and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi on the 11th of May last?

Answer.—Yes, I was.

Question.—Relate what you witnessed on that occasion.

Answer.—I was the servant on duty supervising the repairs of the fort ditch, and was going with the account book for Captain Douglas’ inspection. I was on my way, when a trooper came galloping up from the direction of the Calcutta Gate. The trooper had not reached the palace gate when I observed that Captain Douglas was standing there. I saw Captain Douglas speaking to the man; but before I reached the palace gate myself the trooper turned his horse and rode off. Captain Douglas told me to go up to his apartments, and said that he was going to the interior of the palace and should return immediately. Captain Douglas did so, and I stayed at the gate, Makhan, Kishan Singh and others accompanied him. Captain Douglas had hardly gone when Mr. Fraser arrived in his buggy and inquired for him. Mr. Fraser alighted and walked on through the covered way up to the opening. He then said to me he was going to the Calcutta Gate, and that I was to tell Captain Douglas so on his return. I then myself proceeded in the direction of the King’s apartments and met Captain Douglas returning in a state of excitement. I gave him Mr. Fraser’s message. Captain Douglas went to the Lahore Gate of the palace, and told the native officer on guard there to close it, which was done. Captain Douglas at the same time gave orders that no crowd was to be allowed to assemble on the bridge leading into the palace. Just about this time an officer of the King’s, styled a captain, also came there from the direction of the main street of Delhi. The gate had been closed and Captain Douglas’ buggy was inside, so he directed me to ask this native officer for his buggy that he might go in it as far as the Calcutta Gate, whither Captain Douglas proceeded in it, I occupying the seat behind. At the Calcutta Gate we found Mr. Fraser, Mr. Nixon, head clerk, and four or five other gentlemen. The gate was closed after a short time. Mr. Fraser and Captain Douglas got into the buggy together, and were returning to the palace accompanied by the other gentlemen on horseback, but had not proceeded far when four or five troopers came galloping up at full speed from the direction of the Ellenborough Tank. About this time there was a general cry that the troopers had come. On reaching the party of gentlemen, one of the troopers wounded Mr. Hutchinson in the arm with a pistol shot; the others also fired, but without effect. On this Mr. Fraser and Captain Douglas both got out of the buggy and went out of the way of the musketeers, and stood by the guard room of the constabulary force at the gate: two more gentlemen joined them there. Mr. Fraser got a musket from the constabulary force, and shot one of the troopers. This checked the others, and they turned and fled. A great crowd had by this time collected, and Captain Douglas and another gentleman jumped into the fort ditch, along which they came on to the palace gate. Mr. Fraser and others coming by the road; but there was such confusion at the time I can’t say how. Captain Douglas was in a fainting state from the injuries he had received from jumping into the ditch, and we accordingly laid him on a bed in the Kulliyat Khana. In a short time Mr. Jennings, the clergyman, came down, and at his suggestion Captain Douglas was taken up to the apartments above the gate, where he was placed on a bed, Mr. Jennings sending the servants away, and telling them not to crowd about the place. We then received an order to go for the King’s physician, and Abdul Kader Chuprassey fetched him accordingly. The physician, Abdu Khan, had just left, when we servants who were sitting there, saw some five Mahomedans, King’s servants, coming along the covered way calling out “Din din.” Just at this time Mr. Fraser happened to come down to the foot of the stairs, and these men immediately attacked him and killed him with their swords. While this was happening on the north side of the gate, a mixed crowd, armed with swords, bludgeons, &c., ran up the stairs on the south side, and gained the apartments above, those assembled on the north side joining them there. By this time every one tried to make his own escape, and I did so with the rest. From that date I never came to the palace till I returned to Delhi from Jabu-ka-Katla. I should mention that at the commencement of the attack the crowd was headed and urged on by a Muslimah havildar of the 38th Native Infantry, who was one of the guard at the Lahore Gate of the palace. I know nothing more.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness withdraws.

ELEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, 9 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at 11 a.m. in the Hall of Special Audience in the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of yesterday.

The president, members, interpreter, and deputy judge advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas, is brought into court.

Chandi, News-writer for the Public, is brought into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you present in Delhi on the morning of the 11th of May last?

Answer.—Yes, I was at my house.

Question.—Did you witness the soldiers coming from Meerut on that day; if so, state all that you know relative to it?

Answer.—No, I did not see them coming; but hearing that the city gates were being closed, I went out to see what was happening; and on my coming into the Chandni Chouk street, I saw the chief police officer of the city busy having the shops closed. I heard from him that Sir Theophilus Metcalfe was similarly engaged. I went with the crowd in the direction of the Calcutta Gate, and there saw Mr. Fraser and four or five other gentlemen. Mr. Fraser's personal guard of Jhajjar troopers was with him. Mr. Fraser went to the top of the gate, accompanied by another gentleman and Shiraf-ul-Hak, the chief police officer of the city, and at this moment the police officer of the second class at the Sahi Mandi. After a while Mr. Fraser came down and disposed the force present, by telling the Jhajjar troopers to fall in and form, and at the same time made the Constabulary Guard form and draw their swords, himself taking a position between them. This had just been done when about seven troopers and two men mounted on camels, galloped up by the road along the palace from the direction of Darya ganj, and immediately on coming within pistol shot distance, the whole party fired at the European gentlemen at 162.
the gate. On this the crowd dispersed in all directions, and I also went home. I observed, however, before leaving, that the Jhajjar Sowars made no resistance, but deserted Mr. Fraser, and fled immediately the troopers came down. After that I did not leave my house till evening, and knew nothing of the further incidents of that day.

Question.—When you went down to the Calcutta Gate, was a large crowd already assembled there?

Answer.—There were at least 400 or 500 people collected in the small space known as the Grape Garden.

Question.—At what hour was this?

Answer.—It was near nine; but I can’t speak with certainty as to the time.

Question.—What was it, do you suppose, that made such a number of people collect there, the quarter not being one of traffic?

Answer.—The unusual stir caused by the closing of the gate, led to the collecting of the rabble there, the crowd being increased by the bathers from the river hurrying to get in before the gates should be closed.

Question.—You say you were a news-writer; you consequently ought to be well informed on what was passing; do you believe that no information had been given to many of the people a day or two before of what was likely to occur on the 11th?

Answer.—I heard nothing of a preconcerted outbreak arranged particularly for the 11th of May; but there was considerable agitation and excitement in the city, consequent, first, on a paper purporting to be a proclamation from the King of Persia, and secondly, on the reports which arrived of the burning of the bungalows at Ambala, and of the reported dissatisfaction of the troops in consequence of their being required to use greased cartridges.

Question.—Did you edit a paper of your own; and if so, what was the title of it?

Answer.—I did edit a paper, and headed it “Delhi News;” but it was not known by that title, or any other; it was a mere explanation of the contents. I wrote it daily, and took the manuscript round and read it to my subscribers.

Question.—Used you to file copies; and if so, have you any in your possession now?

Answer.—I did file the originals regularly, both before and after the outbreak. I succeeded in preserving all those issued since the 11th of May by building them up in a wall, and on the recapture of Delhi, I made up any deficiencies with the assistance of Nandkishwar, and putting them in a complete form, I made them over to Colonel Burn, the military governor of Delhi, who had them translated.

Question.—How many Jhajjar Sowars had Mr. Fraser with him on the 11th of May?

Answer.—Including officers, the guard comprised two or three and twenty men, and the whole of them were apparently with Mr. Fraser when he was attacked.

Question.—You have said that all these men, though in regular formation at the time, turned and fled on the approach of five or six cavalry troopers; to what do you attribute this; do you believe that these men had previous information of what was going to happen?

Answer.—My opinion is that they had no previous knowledge on the subject; the mutineers calling out “Din din,” the Jhajjar men acted on the impulse of the moment in deserting Mr. Fraser.

Question.—You did not previously state that they had called out anything; how is it you forgot to do so?

Answer.—It is eight months ago since all this happened; as the different incidents come to my recollection I mention them. When I left the troopers were calling “Din din,” and were ensuring the crowd on both sides that they would not harm or molest any of the natives.

Question.—What were the general points of information of news you used to give in your paper previous to the 11th of May; did any of the articles ever refer to the native army, or the dissatisfaction supposed to exist in it?

Answer.—My paper used to contain articles on all subjects of general interest, and all information that I could glean from printed papers. I remember on some few occasions having alluded to the cartridge question, and the mutinous spirit evinced by the army in connexion with them.

Question.—Do you remember ever writing any articles on the advance of the Persians upon Meerut?

Answer.—I don’t remember particularly having done so; but generally I used to insert such news concerning Persia as I was able to obtain from the journals of the city printed in Persian.

Question.—As you read these articles yourself to your subscribers, you must know which generally excited the greatest interest. Was the dissatisfaction supposed to exist among the sepoys much attended to?

Answer.—It caused no excitement among the Hindus; but the Mahomedans took a marked interest in the news about Persia, and used to go about exulting and boasting that the Persians were coming, and would do this, that, and the other. As regards the general dissatisfaction of the troops, the Mahomedans only seemed affected by it, and certainly appeared to be very much excited and interested.

Question.—At the time the Persians were said to be coming, was there much talk also regarding the Russians?

Answer.—Yes, they were both spoken of; but the Persians more frequently so.

Question.—
Question.—Were there any native newspapers circulated at Delhi, whose general tone and tenor were adverse to the British Government?
Answer.—There was one such paper, a weekly published by Jamal-ud-din, the articles in which evinced decided enmity against the Government; it was called the "Sadik-ul-Akhbar," or the "Authentic News."

Question.—Had this paper a great circulation, and was it a printed one?
Answer.—It had a circulation of some 200 copies in and out of the city of Delhi, and was lithographed.

Question.—Did this paper confine itself to its weekly publication, or did it sometimes issue extras on particular news arriving?
Answer.—Yes, on occasions of important intelligence arriving, extras were issued.

Question.—Among whom, or what class of men, had this paper its chief circulation?
Answer.—It had an equal circulation amongst all classes capable of reading, without distinction of caste.

Question.—Two hundred appears a very small number of copies for so populous a place as Delhi; is it customary among the natives to read their papers among knots of friends if assembled to hear the news, and does one copy of a paper suffice for several families?
Answer.—Yes, it has been the custom among the subscribers to circulate their copies amongst their relations and friends.

Question.—Was the "Authentic News" considered the leading journal in Delhi; and what was its circulation as compared with others?
Answer.—Yes, it was considered the leading journal; the articles in it were better written, and some being extracted from papers published in English, had more interest for the Mahomedans. I cannot speak what relative circulation it had with others; but the copies of it sold much more numerous than either of any other native paper.

Question.—You have mentioned it was very hostile in tone to the British Government; can you recollect the subject of any particular articles which evinced this feeling?
Answer.—I cannot remember any particular article in which such feeling was more conspicuously evinced than in others; but in those relating to Persia and the Russians, the style and tone of composition was always hostile, and very bitterly so.

Question.—Did you ever hear of any anonymous petition being sent to the magistrates, to the effect that an attack was to be made upon the Cashmere Gate, and that it was to be wrested from the possession of the English?
Answer.—No, I don’t recollect having heard any such report.

Question.—Did you ever hear a report that there would be a great disturbance on the 21st of May or any other fixed date?
Answer.—No, I never heard any report of the kind.

Question.—Do you recollect the circumstance of chapatties being circulated from village to village?
Answer.—Yes, I remember hearing of it before the outbreak.

Question.—Was this subject discussed in the native newspapers; and if so, what was considered the meaning of it?
Answer.—Yes, it was alluded to; and it was supposed to portend some coming disturbance, and was moreover understood as implying an invitation to the whole population of the country to unite for some secret object afterwards to be disclosed.

Question.—Do you know whence these chapatties originated, or to what quarter general opinion among the natives attributed them?
Answer.—I have no knowledge as to where they were first started; but it was generally supposed that they came from Karnaul and Panipat.

Question.—Do you know whether a copy of the "Authentic News" used to be sent to the inmates of the palace?
Answer.—Yes, several copies used to be sent to the palace; but I do not now know by whom they were taken.

Question.—Was a court journal kept by order of the prisoner during the rebellion?
Answer.—Yes, one was kept; and it was published at the Royal lithographic press, in the palace; before the outbreak, it contained chiefly items of intelligence connected with the palace, but other matters too were occasionally admitted to it. It was called the Suraj-ul-Akhbar, or the "Sun of Intelligence."

Question.—Were you present in the palace on the occasion of any Europeans being massacred?
Answer.—I was. One morning about five or six days after the outbreak on the 11th of May, I heard at my house that there was a great disturbance going on in the palace. I accordingly proceeded there, and entering by way of the Delhi Gate, I had reached the new palace, when I saw the king’s personal armed attendants, and some of the mutinous soldiers were slaying the Europeans. It was about half-past nine or ten o’clock. At this time one of the king’s servants spoke to me, saying, "You collect news for the English; if you continue to do so, you shall be served in the same way as these have been. This man’s name was Bhika, and he was in the service of Mirza Abdul, one of the sons of the prisoner.

Question.—Where were the Europeans brought from?
Answer.—I don’t know; but I heard they were brought from the King’s kitchen.

Question.—Is this kitchen in the same square or court-yard with the King’s apartments?
Answer.—The king’s apartments may be said to be on one side of the palace, and this place called the kitchen, in which the Europeans were imprisoned, was on the opposite side, the intermediate spaces being occupied by the court-yard, in which are the buildings of the Hall of Special Audience, and that of public audience; the distance from the King's apartments may be 200 or 250 yards.

Question.—What kind or rank of people generally occupied this place assigned to European ladies and children?

Answer.—The building was used as an office by the King's professor of the Mahomedan law.

Question.—Do you mean to say that such buildings as these ladies and children were confined in were used in any way by persons of rank or importance?

Answer.—No, they certainly were not.

Question.—By whom then were they used?

Answer.—They were partially used as sheds for lumber; and formerly culprits imprisoned by the King used to be kept there.

Question.—Was there any means of guarding the ladies and children there, if such had been wished, or is the place open to the entrance of any rabble who might fancy to go in?

Answer.—No, it was an open building, without protection or privacy.

Question.—Would any native of ordinary respectability not consider it a great indignity to be put there?

Answer.—Yes, unmistakably; he would consider himself disgraced and dishonoured by being sent there.

Question.—Was this the only vacant spot in the palace in which ladies or children could have been kept in confinement?

Answer.—There was no scarcity of buildings in which they might have had every comfort.

Question.—By whose orders were these Europeans murdered?

Answer.—It was done by the King's orders; who else could have given such an order?

Question.—Did you see any of the King's sons present on the occasion looking on at the slaughter?

Answer.—There was a great crowd; I did not notice any of them. I observed, however, some people standing on the roof of Mirza Moghal's house, and heard that he himself was looking on through the lattices.

Question.—Were the Europeans bound with cords before they were murdered?

Answer.—I did not notice.

Question.—Were they made to sit down in a row before the slaughter commenced?

Answer.—I was not able to go up to the spot, and remained in the Trepolis. I could not see the crowd, but after the slaughter had been completed, and the crowd dispersed, when orders came from the King to remove the bodies, and they were being laden on carts, I went and asked the sweepers employed, and learnt from them that 52 people had been killed. The corpses on the ground then were lying in a circle.

Question.—How many corpses of men were among the number?

Answer.—Only five or six; the rest were women and children.

Question.—Do you know what was subsequently done with these bodies?

Answer.—Yes, they were taken in two carts in the direction of Salimgarh, in order to be thrown into the river, in conformity to the prisoner's orders.

Question.—When the massacre had been accomplished, were any guns fired as a token or expression of joy on the occasion?

Answer.—I heard no guns myself, nor did I hear from any one else that any had been fired.

It being four o'clock, the Court adjourns till 11 a.m. to-morrow.

TWELFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Wednesday, 10 February 1858.

The Court reassembled this day in the Hall of Special Audience, in the Palace, at Delhi. The president, members, interpreter, and deputy judge advocate-general are all present. The prisoner is brought into Court, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas.

Chuni, the witness of yesterday, is re-called into Court, and examined on his former affirmation.

Question.—Can you give the Court any information about any other persons murdered in other quarters of the city of Delhi?

Answer.—I witnessed no other murders but those I have already spoken of; but I heard that some Europeans, about 25, so long as their ammunition lasted, defended themselves in the Kishangarh Rajah's house. On their ammunition failing, they were brought out from an underground apartment, and killed by some of the Mahomedan inhabitants in concert with some of the mutinous troopers.

Question.—Was the King's authority ever proclaimed in Delhi, and if so, when?

Answer.—On the 12th of May, the King's orders directing the re-opening of the shops was proclaimed by beat of drum, and about two days after the King went out in state, mounted mounted on an elephant, and accompanied by a regiment of infantry, some guns, his own special armed retainers, and a band of musicians. This was done with the object of having the shops re-opened; he went as far as that part of the main street, where the houses are built, so as to form a crescent on either side, and returned with the same pomp and ceremony as that with which he had set out. There was a salute of 21 guns fired on his departure from the palace, and a similar one on his return to it.

Cross-examined by the Prisoner.

Question.—Did you ever hear that the mutinous troops which came from Meerut, did so at the King's suggestion, or on the impulse of their own wills?
Answer.—I have no information on the subject either one way or the other.

Question.—I stated yesterday that the building in which the ladies and children were confined was used by the King's professor of the Mahomedan law; you afterwards stated that any native of respectability sent there would unmistakably consider himself disgraced and dishonoured by it; how do you reconcile these statements?
Answer.—All sorts of people, high and low, used to collect there owing to its being an office; and from this it is evident that it could not have been considered a fit place for the detention of people having any claims to respectability. It was not the residence of the professor, it was merely where he used to discharge his office duties.

The witness withdraws.

Chunji Lal, Pedlar, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi on the 11th and 12th of May last?
Answer.—Yes, I was, on both dates.

Question.—Did you, on either of those dates, hear the King's authority proclaimed by beat of drum?
Answer.—On the 11th of May, about midnight, some 20 guns were fired in the palace. I heard the reports at my house, and next day at about noon, a proclamation was made by beat of drum that the country had reverted to the possession of the King.

Question.—Did you witness any procession made by the King on an elephant in state?
Answer.—No, I left the palace a few days after the outbreak; I never saw the King's procession; but on one occasion I witnessed the state procession of Mirza Moghal as commander-in-chief.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness withdraws.

Gulab, a Messenger, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi at the time the European ladies and children were massacred in the palace in May last, and if so, did you see them on that occasion?
Answer.—Yes I was, and saw them murdered.

Question.—When did you first hear that they were to be killed?
Answer.—I heard of it two days before the occurrence; it was said the Europeans would be killed in two days, but I do not recollect what day it was. On the day fixed for the slaughter arriving, great crowds of people were flocking to the palace at about 10 a.m. I entered with them. On reaching the first court-yard, I saw the prisoners all standing together, surrounded on all sides by the King's special armed retainers, or what you may term his body guard, and some of the infantry mutineers. I did not observe any signal orders given; but on a sudden the men just mentioned drew their swords and all simultaneously attacked the prisoners, and continued cutting at them, till they had killed them all. There were at least 100 or 150 men employed in this work of slaughter.

Question.—Did any one make any attempt to save them, or did you hear that any one had interceded for them with the King?
Answer.—No, no one made any attempt whatever to save them, nor did I hear that any one ever interceded with the King on their account.

Question.—You have stated that the time for murdering these women was fixed two days previously; was it stated by whose orders they were to be murdered?
Answer.—I did not hear whose orders had been issued in the matter; but without orders it could not have happened.

Question.—Was it generally understood that the King sanctioned the murder of these women and children?
Answer.—This was not known at the time; but people spoke about it, saying, "The prisoners are to be killed the day after to-morrow."

Question.—Was any authority in Delhi capable of giving an order for their murder beyond that of the King?
Answer.—There were only two sources from which the order could have emanated, the King and his son Mirza Moghal. I don't know which of them gave the order.

Question.—
Question. — How many Europeans do you suppose were murdered on this occasion; and were they tied previous to being killed?

Answer. — I can make no estimate; they were standing together in a line, surrounded by their murderers; but the great portion of the prisoners were children; they were not tied in any way.

Question. — Do you know what was done with the bodies?

Answer. — No, the palace was cleared of the crowd by the soldiery immediately after the slaughter, and I never heard what became of the bodies.

Question. — Did you witness the murder of any people at the bank?

Answer. — Yes, I was witness to the murder of Mr. Berresford and his family. When the bank was attacked by the mutineers and the rabble, Mr. Berresford and his family retired to one of the out-offices for concealment, and when discovered were on the roof of the building. Mr. Berresford was armed with a sword, and Mrs. Berresford had a spear. The mutineers being afraid to approach them by the staircase in front, two of the rabble suggested that they should go round and scale the wall in the rear of the house. Mrs. Berresford struck one of the assailants with a spear and killed him, they were, however, overpowered and all killed. I do not know what number of persons were killed at the bank; but there were several. This occurred on the day of the outbreak, at about twelve o'clock.

Question. — Were any of the ladies taken away, or were they all killed at once?

Answer. — They were all killed immediately; none were retained as prisoners.

Question. — Were any of the King's armed retainers among the assailants at the bank?

Answer. — No.

Question. — Was the King proclaimed as the reigning sovereign immediately after the outbreak?

Answer. — Yes, the proclamation was made by beat of drum on the very day of the outbreak, about three in the afternoon, to the effect that it was now the King's Government.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

Examined by Court.

Question. — Do you know why the prisoners were kept so many days in confinement, and was there any reason for appointing any particular day for their murder?

Answer. — No, I have no knowledge on either point.

The witness withdraws.

Ahsan Ulla Khan, the Physician, is recalled, and Examined on his former Affirmation.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question. — Was a court diary of occurrences at the palace kept by order of the King during the rebellion?

Answer. — The court diary was kept up as usual according to the custom which had long preceded the outbreak.

Question. — Look at this leaf, and see whether you can recognise the handwriting on it?

Answer. — Yes; it is in the handwriting of the man who kept the court diary, and this leaf is a portion of it.

Translation of an Extract from the Court Diary for the 18th of May 1857.

"The King held his court in the Hall of Special Audience; 49 English were prisoners, and the army demanded that they should be given over to them for slaughter. The King delivered them up, saying, 'The army may do as they please,' and the prisoners were consequently put to the sword. There was a large attendance, and all the chieftains, nobles, officials, and writers presented themselves at the court, and had the honour of paying their respects."

Question. — Were you present on the 11th of May at Delhi?

Answer. — Yes, I was.

Question. — Relate what you witnessed on that occasion.

Answer. — On the morning of the 18th of Ramzan, alias the 11th of May, at about seven o'clock a.m., a Hindu sepoy of the 38th Regiment of Native Infantry came up to the door of the Hall of Special Audience in the palace, and said to some of the door-keepers that 'the court was to be on the spot, that the native army at Meerut had mutinied against the State, and were now on the point of entering Delhi; that he and the rest of them would no longer serve the Company, but would fight for their faith. My house is in the palace, and close by the Hall of Special Audience, and I was immediately informed by one of the Mahomedan door-keepers of what the 38th sepoy had said. I had hardly received this information, when the King of Delhi sent for me. I attended on him immediately, and his Majesty said, "Look! the cavalry are coming by the road of the Zer Jharokha." [Zer Jharokha is literally "under the lattice," but appears to be a name given generally to the ground immediately under the lattices of the palace.] I looked and saw about 15 or 20 of the Company's regular cavalry, then about 150 yards distant. They were dressed most of them in uniform, but a few had Hindustani clothes on. I immediately suggested to the King to have the gate fastened by which entrance to the palace from the Zer Jharokha.
Jarokha is obtained, and this had scarcely been done when five or six of the sowers came up to the closed gate, which leads directly under the Suman Burj Palace, where the King has his own private residence in close contiguity with the apartments of the Queens and other secluded females of the establishment.

The sowers commenced calling out "Dohlul Badshah," or "Help O King! we pray for assistance in our fight for the throne." The King, hearing this, made no response to the men beneath; but told Ghulam Abbas, Shamshir-ud-daulat, who was also present, to go to Captain Douglas, commandant of the palace guards, and apprize him of the arrival of the sowers, and request him to do whatever might be necessary in the case. The King then retired to his inner apartments, and I went to the Hall of Special Audience, and almost immediately Ghulam Abbas returned, accompanied by Captain Douglas.

The latter instantly went to the barracks of the Zor Jarokha, where the cavalry still remained, and said to them, "Go away from this: this is the King's palace, your presence here is an annoyance to the King." On this the cavalry went off in the direction of the Rajghat Gate, which gives an entrance to the city immediately to the south of the palace. The King on hearing that Captain Douglas had come, went out and met him in the open space between his private residence and the Hall of Special Audience, when Captain Douglas said to him, "Don't be alarmed, the disturbance shall be put down at once; I will have the men apprehended." He was going off apparently for this purpose, and requested that the gate under the Suman Burj, which I had closed, might be opened to enable him to go and speak to the cavalry for the purpose of reasoning with them. The King said, "You have neither pistols, guns, or soldiers with you, your going among these men would be indiscreet." So Captain Douglas then went off to his own apartments. A very short time after this, a servant of Captain Douglas, came and said that Captain Douglas wished that I and Ghulam Abbas would go to him. We accordingly went, and on seeing Captain Douglas, he said to us, I have spared or hurt your foot. There was another gentleman with him whom I did not recognise; he was lying down on a couch, and had a sabre wound on his right arm. Captain Douglas said, "Send two palanquins with bearers immediately that the English ladies here may be taken to the Queen, and placed under her protection," and just at this time Mr. Simon Fraser, the Commissioner, came into the room, and said, "Get from the King two guns with artillery, and place them at the gate-way underneath us." On this Mr. Fraser came down from Captain Douglas's apartment above the gate-way, accompanied by myself and Ghulam Abbas. I and Ghulam Abbas went straight to the King to deliver the above message, and Mr. Fraser stayed at the opening of the gate-way. We, with the King's permission, immediately sent the palanquins for the ladies, and also gave instructions about the guns; but shortly after this, information reached us that the cavalry had entered the palace enclosure by the Lahore Gate, where Mr. Fraser wished the guns placed, and over which Captain Douglas had his residence: it was also told us that they had killed Mr. Fraser, and had gone up to Captain Douglas to kill him. This was instantly confirmed by the return of the palace bearers, who told us that they had witnessed Mr. Fraser's murder, that his body was in the gateway, and that the troopers had ascended to the upper building for the purpose of murdering those there. The King on hearing this, gave orders for all the gates of the palace to be closed; but answer was given that the infantry, viz. some of the 38th Native Infantry, who were on guard at the palace, would not allow of such being done. After a lapse of some time the cavalry, to the number of about 50, rode up to the Hall of Special Audience, dismounted, and picketed their horses in the adjoining garden. The infantry, I am not sure of what regiments, but I think of all the three Delhi regiments, also came into the palace enclosures, and laid down their beddings in any of the palace buildings that they could make available. The infantry from Meerut did not reach Delhi till about 2 p.m. of that day; they did not reach Delhi in a body, but came struggling in, and as they arrived joined the infantry of the Delhi regiments in spreading their bedding over all parts of the palace enclosures. There was no regular court that day; but the King came out some three or four times to the Hall of Special Audience, where the mutineers were lying about all over the place; and the mutinous troopers came flocking into the palace the whole day and even after the night set in. The 54th came in the evening, and went off at once to occupy the Sajimgarh Fort, where they the next day fixed guns which they brought out of the magazine for the purpose of checking any advance of European troops this way. For three days constant alarms, and especially at night, were given that the Europeans were coming; when the bugles sounded and the mutineers got under arms. On the 12th of May the prisoner's three sons Mirza Moghal and Mirza Khair Sultan and his grandson Mirza Abulbakr applied for the principal commands in the army. I represented to the King that they were not of sufficient age and experience for such appointments, nor would they understand any of the duties, and they were much displeased. The matter remained pending that day. The next day, however, they got Mirza Manda, Mirza Bakhshwah Shah, and Mirza Abdulla, together with the officers of the army, to join them in their request, and accordingly, two days after, they were severally nominated to commands and received dresses of honour.

Question.—You have said that on a requisition being made, the King sent palanquins for the two ladies in Captain Douglas' apartments: when he heard that they and Mr. Fraser were murdered, did he take any steps to secure or punish the murderers?

Answer.—No, there was such confusion that nothing was done.

Question.—It is in evidence that the King's own special servants murdered Mr. Fraser.

162. M
and different persons in the palace on that day: were these servants continued in pay and employment?

Answer.—I never heard that any of the King's servants had joined in the murders; but certainly none of them were ever dismissed on this account.

Question.—Do you mean to say that it was not generally known by whom the murders were committed?

Answer.—No, it was not generally known, nor did I hear who committed the murders.

Question.—Was the slightest investigation ever made on this point?

Answer.—No, none whatever.

Question.—How many armed retainers did the King possess before the outbreak?

Answer.—About 1,200 of all descriptions.

Question.—Were these men in different branches of the army, such as artillery, cavalry and infantry?

Answer.—Yes, they were divided into artillery, cavalry and infantry.

Question.—How many cannon did the King possess?

Answer.—There were six serviceable ones; and I don't know how many others were lying about which were not in use.

Question.—How was this force employed on the 11th of May, the day of the outbreak?

Answer.—They were distributed in guards at the different gates and other houses of the principal palace officials: some who held appointments in consideration of money advances, seldom attended; but received their monthly stipends and remained at home.

Question.—How was it that so many English women and children were brought to the palace and placed in confinement?

Answer.—The mutineers took them in and about the city, and having established their own quarters in the palace, they brought their prisoners in with them too.

Question.—Do you mean to say that each man who took an English person prisoner, retained the custody of him, or of her, or of the children?

Answer.—No, as they brought them in, they reported the circumstance to the prisoner, and in each successive case they were told to take the Europeans to the kitchen, and keep them confined there.

Question.—Who appointed this kitchen as the place of their confinement?

Answer.—The King said that it was a large capacious building, and told the mutineers to keep the prisoners there.

Question.—Who commanded the King's armed retainers before the outbreak?

Answer.—Mahbub Ali Khan virtually did so.

Question.—Did any of them go and attack the magazine on the 11th of May, and if so, by whose orders was it done?

Answer.—No, none of them went according to any orders that I heard of; nor do I know of any having gone at all; but some or all of those living out in the city may have gone for all I can say.

Question.—Do you know whether any emissary from the King, or any relative of his, is at this moment or has been lately at the court of the King of Persia?

Answer.—No, I cannot speak as to the present time; but about two or three years ago, I remember reading in Muhammad Bakr's Gazette, that Mirza Najaf, one of the prisoner's nephews, had gone to the Persian Court, and had been received by the King of Persia with much courtesy and kindness.

Question.—Was this man sent by the King of Delhi?

Answer.—I don't know; but this man's brother, two years before, was sent as an ambassador with a great number of papers to the Government at Calcutta.

Question.—Cannot you give the Court any information relative to Hasan Askari's sending Sidi Kambar to Persia? It is in evidence that you were trusted in all matters of importance, and such as required writing; and it is believed you know all about the matter now alluded to.

Answer.—I solemnly and feeling myself on oath, declare that I have not concealed or misrepresented a single particular. I might have been confided in, but still I was a servant; many points of importance were not entrusted to me; for instance, when the King wished to repudiate his wife the Taj Mahall, who was by caste a Mahomedan Dommie, one of the lowest orders, and to whom he had been reunited in regular marriage, I was not at all consulted: nor was I acquainted with the intrigues going on to secure the succession of Jawan Bakht and other equally important matters. I know nothing of what may have been transacted between the prisoner, Hasan Askari and Sidi Kambar.

Question.—Do you know whether the King through his adherents, by correspondence, or in any manner whatever, kept up any communication with native officers or soldiers of the Company's army, before the outbreak?

Answer.—No, I don't know that he did; it is possible there may have been a correspondence; but I don't think it is likely there was.

It being 4 o'clock, the Court adjourns till 11 a.m. to-morrow.
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

THIRTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Thursday, 11th February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 A.M. in the Hall of Special Audience in the Palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of yesterday.

The President, members, interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate General are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court.

Ahlan Ulla Khan, Physician, is brought into Court, and reminded of his former affirmation.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Are you aware whether the paper called the "Sadik-ul Akhbar," or "Authentic News," was generally perused by the prisoner before the outbreak?

Answer.—He used not to read it regularly, but occasionally some of the princes may have communicated a portion of its contents.

Question.—Did any of the princes appear to take much interest in or attach importance to the articles about Persia, and was it generally represented that the English were being defeated by the Persians?

Answer.—I never read the paper myself, but I heard it was generally represented that the English were being defeated by the Persians, and the princes moreover attached importance to this intelligence, and seemed to credit it.

Question.—Before the outbreak did the Mahomedans generally believe that the reign of the English was coming to an end, and did the princes join in propounding this idea?

Answer.—No, I did not hear of any such belief.

Cross-examined by Prisoner.

Question.—You said that there were 1,200 soldiers in the King's service; describe the uniform of the three branches of the King's army, and what were the appellations of the different regiments.

Answer.—There were two regiments of infantry composed of 500 men each; the colour of their uniform was severally black and brown, the turbans and waistbands of both being red; there were no devices of ornaments about the uniform beyond what was necessary to distinguish the different grades. The artillery consisted of about 40 men; their uniform was dark blue, the turbans and waistbands being red; they had no ornaments or devices about their dress; the special guard of the prisoner was dressed in red coats, with dark blue turbans and waistbands.

The witness withdraws.

Mrs. Aldwell, wife of Alexander Aldwell, a government pensioner, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.— Were you in Delhi on the 11th of May 1857?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Where were you residing; and at what time did you first hear that the native troops from Meerut had come to Delhi?

Answer.—I was residing in the part of the city known as Daryá-ganj, and I got intimation of the sepoys coming from Meerut between eight and nine A.M. on the 11th of May.

Question.—Relate all you witnessed on that day.

Answer.—One of my saises came and told me that the troops had mutinied and come from Meerut, and had murdered all the Europeans they met with on their way here, and related that our carriage should at once be got ready to take us away, as the soldiers had determined on murdering all the Europeans in Delhi also. While I was speaking to the man, our next door neighbour, Mr. Nowlan, confirmed the report that the saise had just brought, and asked if he could speak to Mr. Aldwell. The two consulted together, and as our house was the largest and strongest, it was determined that all the Europeans in the neighbourhood should collect there and defend themselves as long as they could, or till such time as help should arrive. After that, Mr. Aldwell and Mr. Nowlan went to the guard at a hospital close by. This guard was composed of native infantry sepoys, and Mr. Nowlan and Mr. Aldwell asked them whether they would assist in defending us, adding that the Europeans would, in return, render them all assistance that might be in their power. "Go and mind your business, and we will mind ours," was the reply given by these sepoys. At this time, shortly after eight o'clock, the Meerut sepoys had not even crossed the bridge, and could not therefore have communicated with this guard. After this the Europeans who had by this time collected in our house began barricading the doors, and the women and children were sent up stairs. I think we must have numbered, inclusive of men, women and children, upwards of thirty people. We then saw the sepoys crossing the bridge at about 162.

about nine o'clock. A good number of them were cavalry and some infantry: this portion of the mutineers passed close under the walls or parapets of our house, which is immediately on the bank of the river, and some of them fired at one of the gentlemen who was then on the top of the house. This body then went off in the direction of the gond, in the town, as we supposed, of setting the prisoners free. Shortly after that, we heard they had entered the city and were murdering the Europeans wherever they met them. About this time, one of the city people, a Mahomedan, and a dyer by trade, rushed into our grounds with a drawn sword in his hand, recking with blood, repeating the Kalima* and calling out to know where the Europeans were. Mr. Novlan asked him who and what he was, and on his not replying, shot him dead. This man was the only one who had entered our grounds, but then 50 or 60 of his followers, city people, collected at our gate. About 11 o'clock, Mrs. Foulan was brought into our house by a Mahomedan; she had been severely wounded in the head by some of the city people that had entered and plundered her house. Nothing further of consequence happened till about three p.m., when the magazine blew up. I then requested Mr. Aldwell to let me and my three children leave the house, as the servants told me that the mutineers had gone for the purpose of bringing guns to bear upon it, and I was anxious to obtain concealment elsewhere. Myself and three children then dressed ourselves as natives, and left the house in two native doolies, and were taken to the residence of one of the King's grandsons, by name Mirza Abdulla. His wife and sister received us kindly, for Mr. Aldwell and myself had known the family before. We remained there till eight that evening, when Mirza Abdulla came and said he would remove us to a house of greater security, viz., one belonging to his mother-in-law. He removed us there, leaving some of our property with him, saying it would be dangerous for us to take it in the streets, and that I was to send my munshi for it the next morning. I accordingly sent my munshi for this property, viz., 200 rupees in money, and some silver plate; but Mirza Abdulla denied having received it, and sent word that if we didn't remove from his mother-in-law's house, he would send people down to murder us, and accordingly that evening, at about six o'clock, he sent his uncle and some of his servants to our house, and if we had left his house, and if not, to murder us there. I did not see the uncle, but I saw the servants, and they had drawn swords in their hands, when my munshi's mother upbraided, saying, "Is this the Mirza's hospitality? if this had been his intention, why did he not refuse to receive us? Why promise shelter and safety merely for the purposes of murder?" She also added, "If you are determined to kill any one, kill me first; I have eaten the Christian's salt, and cannot now see them murdered." She also added tauntingly, "By killing you you will perform a very meritorious action, as I am a Syudhi, and a Shiahu." This was in allusion to the King's family being Sunnis, and the sect of Sunnis having originally murdered the sons of the prophet, or the Syeds. The men repented to her, that if they were to do so they would be as bad as infidels; but that they were determined on killing all the Christians, and added all who were not so either to leave the house and let them kill us there, or to turn us out of the house, and they would murder us in the street. It was finally permitted to us to remain till next morning, on condition of our then leaving. During the night, however, my munshi brought my tailor to me, and I asked if he knew of any place where he could take and conceal us. He said that he had heard that Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan was sheltering Europeans, and he would take us there. He went to get the Nawab's conveyance, but he returned and said the mutineers had thirty got information of Europeans being concealed in the Nawab's residence, and had brought guns to bear on it; but that he would take us to his own house. He did so, and while we were there he said that he had heard that several Christians had been taken to the palace, and that the King had guaranteed their lives there, though he had put them in confinement; and he advised us, as the safest place, to go there. On Wednesday night, at between seven and eight, this tailor and one of the cavalry mutineers, by name Karisdhal Khan, escorted us to the palace. This trooper had formerly received some kindness from the tailor, and on this account agreed to escort us, saying at the time he would not prove ungrateful to him, although they had all taken an oath to murder every European. On reaching the Lahore Gate of the palace, we were made prisoners by some of the King's police stationed there as a guard. These men took us to Mirza Moghal, who ordered us to be confined with the rest of the European prisoners then in confinement. We were accordingly taken there on Wednesday night, the 13th of May. As far as I can guess, I should say, men, women, and children included, there were from 46 to 50 persons imprisoned. Their names, as far as I and my children have been able to recollect them, are according to the following list; viz., Mrs. Scully and three children, Mrs. Glyn, Mrs. Edwards and two children, Mrs. Molyony and two children, Mrs. Sheehan and child, Mrs. Corbet and daughter, Mrs. Staines, Mrs. Cochrane, Miss Staines, Miss M. Hunt, Miss E. Berresford, Miss L. B., Missed Richard Shaw, Miss Alice Shaw, Miss Ann Shaw, Mr. Roberts and son, Mr. Crow, Mr. Smith. There was one other man, whose name I don't know, nor can I recollect the names of the other women and children. We were all confined in one room, very dark, with only one door, and no window or other opening. It was not fit for the residence of any human being, much less for the number of us that were there. We were very much crowded together, and in consequence of the sepoy's groans and every one who took a fancy and very coming and frightening the children, we were obliged frequently to close the one door that we had, which then left us without light or air. The sepoy used to come with their muskets loaded and and bayonets fixed, and ask us whether we would consent to become Mahomedans, and also slaves, if the King granted us our lives; but the King's special armed retainers, from which the guard over us was always furnished, incited the sepoyos to be content with nothing short of our lives, saying we should be cut up in small pieces, and given as food to the kites and crows. On Thursday some of the sepoyos came and told the ladies that they intended to kill us all by mining and blowing up the palace. We were very indifferently fed; but on two occasions the King sent us better food. Nothing further of consequence occurred till Friday afternoon, when one of the King's special servants asked one of the ladies (I think it was Mrs. Staines) if the English were ever restored to power, how they would treat them; and she replied, "Just as you have treated our husbands and children." The next morning, between eight and nine o'clock, viz. on Saturday, the 16th of May, the whole party of the Europeans, with exception of myself, three children, and an old native Mahomedan woman, who had been confined with us for giving food and water to some Christians, were taken out and murdered.

Question.—How do you know that these people were all murdered, and how was it that an exception was made in favour of yourself and children?

Answer.—Before leaving my tailor's house, I had a petition written addressed to the King, and was taking it myself in hopes of seeing the King, and being able to present it to him in person; but when I was taken prisoner by the guard at the Lahore Gate, the men composing it took the paper from me: in it I had stated that myself and children were from Cashmere and were Musulmans. On this account we had our food given to us separately, and the King's own servants evidently believed we were Musulmans, as they ate and drank with us. Since the outbreak on Monday, I had learnt and had taught my children the Mahomedan confession of faith, and we were all able to repeat it. It was from believing us Musulmans that our lives were spared. On the morning of the 16th of May some of the King's special servants, attended by a small number of infantry sepoyos, came and called out to our party that the Christians were to come out of the building, and that the five Mahomedans were to remain. The women and children began crying, saying they knew they were going to be murdered; but the Mahomedans swore on the Koran, and the Hindus on the Jumna, that such was not the case; that they wanted to give them a better residence, and that the one they were in would be converted into a magazine. On this they went out, were counted, but I do not know the number; a rope was thrown round to encircle the whole group, the same as prisoners are usually kept together when on the move; and in this manner they were taken out of my sight, and as I heard, brought under the jipal tree by the small reservoir in the courtyard, and there murdered with swords by the King's private servants. None of the sepoyos took part in killing them. The privilege, for it was so considered, of murdering them was particularly reserved for the King's own servants, as it was believed by them that the killing an infidel would ensure them a place in paradise. I was told of this at the time by the wife of a sweeper, and afterwards, when residing in Delhi during the whole time of the rebellion, frequently heard this circumstance confirmed. Two guns were fired immediately after the massacre had been completed, and I was then informed that this was intended as a token of joy. About an hour after the massacre, an old man who used to be known as the Mufli Sahib came and said to the King's private servants who were guarding us that he wanted to see the five prisoners who had been saved. He told us that our lives had been spared, and told the King's servants to conduct us to some place of safety, but on no account to do it during the day, as the sepoyos or city people might murder us. (I may mention that some of them had suspicion of our being Christians.) In the evening we were taken back to my tailor's house, and the following Tuesday we were again made prisoners by the police officer of the quarter where we were hiding. We were brought as prisoners before Mirza Moghal. The police officer informed him that we were Christians in disguise, and he gave orders that we should be executed; but the sepoyos of the 38th prevented this being carried into effect, saying they would take us. We were then taken and confined in Captain Douglas' apartments, where we were kept in confinement till the day after the battle of the Hindan, when we were released by the 38th Sepoyos. When the sepoyos, who returned defeated on that occasion, came back to the city, the men began talking despondingly, saying they would have no chance against the English. The Hindu sepoyos especially upbraided the Mahomedans, saying, "This is your first engagement with the English; is this the way you intend to fight for your faith?" They also already spoke in terms of much regret of the turn that affairs had taken, reproached the Mahomedans for having deceived them on pretences of their religion, and seemed to doubt greatly whether the English Government had really had any intention of interfering with their caste. Great numbers of the Hindu sepoyos at this time declared that if they could be sure their lives would be spared, they would gladly go back to the service of the Government; but the Mahomedans, on the contrary, used to assert that the King's service was much better than that of the English, that the Nawabs and Rajahs would supply the King with large forces, and they must eventually conquer.

Question.—During your stay in the city of Delhi, did you any opportunity of observing that there was a marked difference between the bearing of the Mahomedans generally, and that of the Hindus in reference to the rebellion?

Answer.—Yes, the Mahomedans always seemed glad that the mutiny had taken place, and during the Muharram festival, I heard them make prayers for the success of their faith, and these prayers were generally accompanied by exorcisms against the English.
company. We therefore trust that Mirza Moghal may be ordered to direct us to go also, that through your Majesty's prestige, never to be overthrown, we may share in the victory. It was necessary, and has been submitted. Petition of Kandar Khan, and others, of the constabulary force.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

The officer of the Meerut gwal, on duty under the palace lattices, will know that he is to go whithersoever our son Mirza Moghal may send him, and to forward to him any number of men that he may call for. He is to be obedient to all orders of our said son.

SIXTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Thursday, 2 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 a.m. at the hall of special audience in the Palace at Delhi; the President, Members, Interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner is brought into court, and Ghulam Abbas, his assistant, is also in attendance.

The interpreter now reads in the original Persian the papers, the translations of which were perused yesterday.

Abdul Ulla Khan, the physician, is re-called into court, and examined on his former affirmation.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Look at these six papers, and see if you recognise the handwriting of any of them. Six Persian papers, arranged under the head of "murder," are now shown to witness.

Answer.—The orders on Nos. 1 and 2 are in the hand of the prisoner, papers 2, 3, 4, are in the handwriting of Khairat Ali, who was clerk in the office of Bakht Khan, as governorgeneral. This man was in the habit of bringing papers of the kind ready prepared, and having them attested with the King's seal, and so attested, used with the prisoner's sanction to despatch them according to their address.

Question.—Was it usual to retain office copies of such papers?

Answer.—Yes; he used frequently to bring two copies of each paper, on one the seal used to be impressed, frequently so by the King's own hand; and this copy used to be returned to him for dispatch, while the second copy unattested was retained for record in the prisoner's office.

Question.—Do you know anything about the paper No. 5?

Answer.—No, I do not recognise the writing.

Question.—Is it possible or likely that this may be an office copy in the handwriting of some newly-employed clerk, whose hand you are unacquainted with?

Answer.—Yes; I believe it to be the handwriting of some clerk in Muhammad Bakht Khan's office.

The translations of the six papers, arranged under the head of "murder," are now read by the Judge Advocate, and entered as follows.

The papers in the original Persian are now read by the interpreter.

To the King! Shelter of the World!
Respectfully sheweth,—That your petitioner was a duffadar in the 4th Regiment of Cavalry. Having disposed of the English at Muzafarnagar, he reached your royal presence on the 23rd June 1857. He is now serving with devotion in your Majesty's cause, and bears his share in the engagements. Your slave's ancestors have, from antiquity, been nourished by your Majesty's salt. Your slave therefore expects that, on the capture of the ridge occupied by the British, he will now, through your Majesty's favour and consideration, be elevated to some appointment of distinction, so that reaching his ambition, he may ever pray for your Majesty's prosperity. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave, of old nourished by your Majesty's salt, Ghulam Abbas, Duffadar of the 1st troop 4th Regiment of Cavalry, come from Muzafarnagar. Seal of "Ghulam Abbas."

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.
Mirza Moghal will nominate the petitioner to some appointment, according to the usages of the army.

No. 2.

Order from the King, without Signature, Cypher, or Seal, evidently an Office Copy, retained for Record, dated 7th August 1857.

To the ever Faithful, Rao Bhara, the Ruler of Kutch Bhoj.

Consider yourself receiving the royal favour, and know! That Girdhari Singh, Subadar of the Grenadier company of the 16th Regiment of the Bombay Native Infantry being introduced by the adviser of the State, the honoured of the country, the special slave, Muhammad Bakht Khan, Governor-general Bahadur, has come into the royal presence and affirmed that you, ever faithful one, having put the whole of the infidels to the sword, have thoroughly cleansed and purified your domains of their unclean presence. We have been extremely gratified to hear of such conduct on your part, and you are therefore honoured with this address, to the intent that you will institute such arrangements throughout your territory, as that none of the creatures of God may in any way be aggrieved or oppressed. Further, should any numbers of infidels reach your dominions by sea, you will have them slain. In doing this you will act entirely in accordance with our pleasure and wishes; and all such desires as you will entertain and all such requests, as you will make to our presence, will in every point be acceded to. Be assured of our kindness. One copy, and extract transcript. To the ever faithful Rawal Ranjit Singh, ruler of Jassalmir. Dated 11th August 1857.

No. 3.

Order from the King, without Signature, Cypher, or Seal, an Office Copy apparently retained for Record, dated 11th August 1857.

To the ever Faithful, Ranjit Singh, Chief of Jassalmir.

Consider yourself receiving the royal favour, and know! That the chief, Chamman Singh, brother of the ruler of Jaipur, having obtained the honour of admittance to our august presence, through the adviser of the State, the honoured of the country, the special slave Muhammad Bakht Khan, Lord Governor-general Bahadur, director of all matters military and civil, has declared and affirmed that you, emblem of fidelity, cherish an anxious desire and wish to come to the royal presence; and only delay doing so, pending the issue of a special order; you are therefore honoured with this address. It is clear to our belief that throughout your dominions the name or trace of those ill-omened infidels, the English, must not have remained; if, however, by any chance or possibility some have escaped till now by keeping hidden and concealed, first slay them, and after that, having made arrangements for the administration of your territory, present yourself at our court, with your whole military following. Considerations and friendliness a thousand fold will be bestowed on you slave, and you will be distinguished by elevation to dignities and place, which the compass of your qualifications will not have capacity to contain. Be assured of our kindness.

To all Hindus and Mahomedans who wish the advancement of Religion.

Be it known to you! That Falak-ud-din Shah, being one of those who have pledged themselves to fight for the Mahomedan faith, in the religious war against the infidels, and being director of finance and the army, is sent to collect ghazis* as well as money for the expenses of the armies bestowed by God, which have come from all directions, and have assembled at the royal threshold for the destruction of the Christians; and which have already sent thousands of the British soldiers, and others of the English, to hell. It is incumbent on you to consider well your own advantage, and to forward to the royal presence, such amounts of treasure, as he may determine, at the same time sending your accredited agent also. You will, moreover, give the above-named Falak-ud-din Shah such aid, in military forces, for arrangements on the way, and for the slaughter of Christians, as he may demand. Those who will join in the cause of the faith and of religion, will receive distinctions; and those who will confederate with the Christians, will be utterly despoiled of life and property.

Petition of Muhammad Bakht Ali, formerly Gaol Superintendent of the Jhansi District, now Officer commanding the Ali-Ghol, dated 18th August 1857.

To the King! Dispenser of Blessings on the World! Shelter of Mankind, &c.

Respectfully sheweth,—That, in a former petition, your Majesty was made acquainted with the acts of devotion and resolution, which your slave performed in the Jhansi, Orai, Calpee, Etawah, Mynpoory and other districts, as regards the slaughter and ruination of the accursed sect, the Nazarenius;† as also with the devotion your slave, and the soldiers accompanying him, have displayed from the date of their arrival in your Majesty’s presence, the 16th July 1857, up to the present moment in the several attacks on and engagements with the Nazarenes; a list of these soldiers has been deposited in the archives of your Majesty’s government; your slave, therefore, expects that when complete victory shall have been gained, rewards similar to those which may be bestowed on the rest of the army, will be conferred on your slave and his family, and on his equally devoted followers. Moreover, as at present, only 500 soldiers, designated the Ali-Ghol, who, with your slave, are ready to sacrifice their lives in your Majesty’s service, are in attendance at the royal door; if the royal permission is granted, a complete regiment will be raised. But as several bodies, all bearing the same title, Ali-Ghol, have arrived from different places, such distinctive appellation as your Majesty may select for that under your slave will be adopted, so that it may be generally known. Agreeably to your Majesty’s commands, your slave is about proceeding to Malagarh; he therefore submits this petition, that orders may be issued. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Muhammad Bakht Ali, Superintendent of the Gaol, Jhansi district, at present Officer commanding Ali-ghol.‡ Countersigned “Muhammad Bakht Khan,” agreeably to the request of the petitioner.

*Men voluntarily pledging their lives to fight in defence of the Mahomedan religion.
†Nazarenes, Christians.
‡Ali-Ghol—Ali’s hosts. A term first applied to the armies of Ali, the son-in-law of Mahommed, to denote their overwhelming numbers; and subsequently used by the Mahommedan invaders in distinction of their Mahomedan forces from the “Sippeh Hindli” (corrupted into Seepundees), or native mercenary troops raised by them in India.

Question.—Had the Mussulmans and Hindus any quarrels or discussions among themselves on the score of religion when they were in Delhi together?

Answer.—I think when the troops first came, the Hindus made the King promise that there should be no oxen killed in the city, and this promise was kept. I believe that not a single ox was killed in Delhi during the whole time of the rebellion. On the festival of the Bakr-Eed, when the Mahomedans usually slaughter an ox, a disturbance was expected; but the Mahomedans refrained from doing so on this occasion. On the morning of the 9th of September, I effected my escape from Delhi in native disguise, and, accompanied by my three children and two servants, reached Meerut. The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

Examined by Court.

Question.—From what has come to your knowledge, do you believe that any European females were treated with great insult and indignity, either by the native soldiery or populace of Delhi?

Answer.—Yes. The witness withdraws.

It being four o'clock, the Court adjourns till eleven a.m. to-morrow.

FOURTENETH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Friday, 12 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at eleven a.m. in the Hall of Special Audience in the palace at Delhi.

The President, members, interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court.

Mr. C. B. Saunders, officiating commissioner and agent to the Lieutenant-governor, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Can you give the Court any information as to the circumstances under which the Kings of Delhi became subjects and pensioners of the British Government in India?

Answer.—Shah Alam, Emperor of Delhi, after having his eyes put out and having suffered every indignity from the hands of Ghulam Kadir, fell into the hands of the Maharrats in the year 1788. The Emperor, although vested with nominal authority over the city of Delhi, was kept in confinement more or less rigorous, until the year 1803, when General Lake having seized Aligarh, marched with the British troops against Delhi. The Maharrat army drawn out at Patpanganj, six miles from Delhi, was attacked by General Lake, and utterly routed. The city and fort having been evacuated by the Maharrats, the Emperor Shah Alam sent a message to General Lake, applying for the protection of the British authorities, and on the 14th of September, the date since rendered more memorable by the successful assault in 1857, the British troops entered Delhi; from that time the kings of Delhi have become pensioned subjects of the British Government, and have exchanged the state of rigorous confinement in which they were held by the Maharrats, to one of more lenient restraint under the British rule. The prisoner succeeded to the titular sovereignty of Delhi in 1837. He had no power whatever beyond the precincts of his own palace; he had the power of conferring titles and dresses of honour upon his own immediate retainers, but was prohibited from exercising that power on any others. He and the heir apparent alone were exempted from the jurisdiction of the Company's local courts, but were under the orders of the Supreme Government.

Question.—Was there any limit to the number of the prisoner's armed retainers?

Answer.—The prisoner requested Lord Auckland to be permitted to entertain as many men in his service as he thought proper. The Governor-general, in reply, accorded permission to his entertaining as many men as he could pay out of the income allotted to him.

Question.—Can you state the amount of pension granted by the Government to the prisoner at the time of the outbreak?

Answer.—He was in receipt of a stipend of one lakh of rupees per mensem, of which 99,000 rupees were paid at Delhi, and 1,000 at Lucknow, to the members of his family there. He also was in receipt of revenue to the amount of 1½ lakhs of rupees per annum, from the Crown lands in the neighbourhood of Delhi. He also received a considerable sum from ground-rents of houses and tenements in the city of Delhi.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness withdraws.
Major Paterson, of the 54th Native Infantry, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi on the 11th of last May?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Relate what you witnessed on that occasion?

Answer.—There was a parade on the morning of the 11th, for the purpose of hearing some order read, and it passed off as usual without anything occurring to point suspicion of any outbreak being at hand; but about nine o'clock the regiment was ordered to parade for the purpose of proceeding to the bridge of boats over the Jumna, to prevent some mutineers of the 3rd Cavalry from crossing; it being then understood that these men were on their way from Meerut. Arriving on parade, I was ordered by the late Colonel Ripley to take two companies, my own (the Grenadiers) and No. 1, for the purpose of escorting a couple of guns down. The Colonel directed me to proceed in the first instance to Captain De Teissier's house for orders, that being on the road down, and Captain De Teissier told me to take my companies to the Sudder Bazar, and wait till the guns came. I was there for about three-quarters of an hour, and the guns not coming, I sent my subaltern, Lieutenant Vibart, to ascertain the reason of the delay, and to save time I proceeded with my two companies in direction of the bridge, thinking the guns would overtake me. Lieutenant Vibart rejoined me half way, saying that the native gunners were just turning out, but that the guns would now come up immediately. They joined me when I was 1½ miles from the bridge. On our arriving within about 100 yards of the Cashmere Gate, I was met by Captain Wallace, 74th Native Infantry, field officer of the week, who requested me to hasten in as fast as I could, as the cavalry mutineers had arrived, and had shot down all the officers of the 54th Native Infantry. I immediately ordered the two companies to load, and while this was being done, Colonel Ripley came out of the Cashmere Gate, wounded in several places, and supported by the fife-major. I then marched on expecting to meet the mutineers, but there was not one to be seen,—not even a sepoy of the eight companies of the 54th Native Infantry that had gone in advance with Colonel Ripley,—but merely the usual main guard of 50 men of the 38th Native Infantry under Lieutenant Proctor. Captain Wallace told me that these men of the 38th had seen Colonel Ripley cut down within a few yards of them by the cavalry troopers; and though he urged them to rescue him, not a man attempted to do so. The sepoys of the 54th must, of course, have behaved in an equally shameful manner. I saw the following officers lying dead in the open space to the west of the church, viz. Captain Smith, Captain Burrows, Lieutenant Edwardson, and also the fife-major, all of the 54th Native Infantry. Having placed the guns in position and sentries at the different points, I proposed to Lieutenant Vibart that we should go and bring in the bodies of the officers; the sepoys of the companies advised us not to do so just yet, as the troopers were about and looking out for officers. The sepoys said they would do it, as they would not be touched; they did not, however, do so at this time. Shortly after this, we were joined by the adjutant, Lieutenant Osborne, and Lieutenant Butler, who had been by the city people. Ensign Angelo also joined us, and everything at this time was perfectly quiet at the Cashmere Gate; but about 12, a sepoy of the light company came to me and said that the havildar major had sent him to ask where the regiment was to go. I then inquired where it was, and he told me at Sabzi Mandi; that on the troopers shooting down the officers, the men had run away and assembled there. I directed him to go and order them up to the Cashmere Gate. They came up without any European officer, and the havildar major told me that they had been followed the whole way by some of the troopers who were inciting them to join in the mutiny. After this the officers, assisted by some of the sepoys, went and brought in the bodies above mentioned. We were now joined by the 74th under Major Abbot, and also a couple of guns of Captain De Teissier's battery. I think it was about this time, 2 p.m., that we heard heavy firing in the direction of the magazine, which continued till about half-past three, when it was blown up. I forgot to mention that on my arrival at the Cashmere Gate, Mr. Galloway came and asked me to strengthen his guard at the treasury, which I did. Lieutenant Willoughby joined us, having made his escape from the magazine, when he told us how he and the few Europeans with him had defended it, and of the King having in the morning sent down men to take possession of it, and that this being refused, scaling ladders had been sent down at two o'clock, according to a threat given them. We remained at the Cashmere Gate till about six o'clock, when all of a sudden, as I was standing near the outer Cashmere Gate, a volley was fired, which passed close in front of me, killing Captain Gordon and Lieutenant Revelly of the 74th, and wounding Lieutenant Osborne, of the 54th. A sepoy of the light company then put his arm on my shoulder and told me I had better go or I should be shot down; and seeing it was useless to remain, the sepoys of the 54th being no longer under control, I went out and was joined by the others going down to the flag-staff by the main road, but the sepoys of the light company (the only one who stood by me) recommended me going off the road through the several compounds, the main road not being safe. We did so, and on reaching the flag-staff I reported to Brigadier Graves all that I had noticed. There were two guns and about 300 of the 38th Native Infantry at this time with Brigadier Graves, who, as far as I could perceive, were still obeying orders; but I was not there myself when a retreat was determined on, the men of the 38th saying they would retreat with us wherever we went. They fell in, marched down the hill, took the the road through cantonments; but on getting near their lines went off by ones and twos to their huts, and on my asking them what they were going to do, said they were going to drink water. They took off their arms and accoutrements, and in fact went off together. On doing this I went to my own quarter guard. This was about half-past seven. I endeavoured to persuade the guard to come along with me, and remained talking to them for about half an hour, and at last the havildar-major and two sepoys agreed to accompany me. We then started off, but lost our way during the night, and found ourselves not more than four miles from Delhi in the morning. I remained three days in the vicinity of the ice-pits, about three miles from the city. The havildar and one of the sepoys left me under the pretence of bringing me food; the other left me the next day, and I finally made my escape, assisted by a fakir, to Karnaul.

Question.—From what you observed of your own men on the 11th of May, or any time immediately preceding it, do you think the sepoys of the 54th Native Infantry had been apprised of the coming of the mutineers from Meerut before they were generally known to be near?

Answer.—Not from anything that I observed on the 11th, or previous to it; but I now am convinced, from their whole conduct on that day, as well as from information I have since received, that they knew generally what was going to occur. Lieutenant Vilhart, in September last, told me that the subedar-major of the regiment, Sheikh Imam Baksh, had stated to the late Captain Russell that men had been in our lines two months before the 11th of May, coming and going away, and instigating the sepoys to rebellion. Captain Russell was killed at Balli-kas-Serai on the 8th of June last; the subedar-major is, I believe, still at Meerut; and it was there, after the outbreak, that I imagine Captain Russell got this information from him.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

The witness withdraws.

Mukund Lal, secretary to the ex-King of Delhi, is called into Court, and duly affirmed.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Do you know anything concerning the origin of the late rebellion in the native army?

Answer.—The King of Delhi has for some two years been disaffected against the Government, and was disposed not to respect his obligations to the English. The particulars are as follows: when Mirza Haidar Shikoh and Mirza Murid, sons of Mirza Khan Baksh, son of Mirza Saluaman Shikoh, came here from Lucknow, they, in concert with Hasan Askari, arranged and suggested to the King that he should have a letter prepared and despatched to the King of Persia. This letter, they suggested, should represent that the English had made the King a prisoner, and had put a stop to all those marks of respect to which, as King, he was entitled, and had suspended the appointment of an heir-apparent. It was further to represent that his wishes in reference to the appointment of any particular son as heir-apparent were not attended to. Under these circumstances, the letter was to request that such an understanding might be established that mutual interchanges of visits and letters might be the result. Shab Kamber, who was one of the King's special armed retainers, was presented with 100 rupees, through Mahbub Ali Khan, for the expenses of his journey, and was despatched in the direction of Persia, with a letter that had been prepared in the King's private secretariat office. After this, Mirza Haidar and his brother returned to Lucknow, and having despatched his brother, Mirza Najaf, a distant relation of the King, with Mirza Balaki, son of Mirza Mustahra-ul-din, son of Mirza Agha Jan, to Persia, reported the same to the King in writing. It is now about three years since some infantry soldiers stationed at Delhi became the disciples of the King through Mirza Ali, whose duty it was to receive and present all petitions, and also through Hamid Khan Jenadar; and on that occasion the King gave each of them a document detailing the names and order of those who had preceded him in the direct line, disciples to each other, himself included, together with a napkin dyed pink as an emblem of his blessing. The agent of the Lieutenant-governor hearing of this occurrence, inquired regarding it, and for the future prohibited the King's making any more of the men of the army his disciples. It may be said that from that day a sort of understanding was established between the army and the King. Some 20 days before the commencement of the late rebellion, intelligence was received here that the troops at Meerut were about breaking out in open mutiny, but it had not been heard that they were to come here. When the troopers arrived, they first came under the palace gate, and told the King that they would kill the English at Meerut, and that they would slay immediately those that were there; and they further said that they would, for the future, consider the prisoner their King, and that now there was not an Englishman left in all India—all had been slain. They further said that the whole army would obey the King's orders. The King said that if they had a disposition to come, that they should prepare themselves for all consequences, and if they were so prepared, they were at liberty to come and take the management of matters into their hands. While this disturbance was going on, these traitors got into the city; the special armed retainers joined them, and Kadir Daul Khan, a resident of Cabul, slew the resident, Mr. Fraser, while some of the infantry soldiers, with others of the King's retainers, went to the apartments of the commandant of the palace guards, and slew him there. After that, the English
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

English were killed all about the city wherever they were met with. The same day proclamation was made by beat of drum throughout the city, that God was the Ruler of the World, and that Bahadur Shah was sovereign of the country, and had the supreme authority. The next day, the 12th, when the troops from Meerut and those at Delhi had coalesced, the King took his seat on the throne, a salute of guns was fired, and Mahbub Ali Khan, the minister, was ordered to give the whole army a feast. Accordingly they were all supplied with confectionary, the native officers receiving in addition a present in money. Formerly a silver throne had been kept in the Hall of Special Audience, on which the King used to take his seat on special state occasions; but since the year 1842, the presentation of the usual offering by the agent of the Lieutenant-governor on occasion of interviews and salutes was disallowed. This throne was then removed and placed in a recess in the passage below the King's sitting-room, and since that time was in disuse till the 12th of May, when it was brought out again, and the King took his seat on it, as on a throne.

Question.—Before the 11th of May, were any proposals sent by the army to the King?

Answer.—I don't know whether any direct proposals came to the prisoner, but the King's personal attendants sitting about the entrance to his private apartments, used to converse among themselves, and say that very soon, almost immediately, the army would revolt and come to the palace, when the government of the King would be re-established, and all the old servants would be greatly promoted and advanced in position and emoluments.

It being four o'clock the Court adjourns till 11 A.M. to-morrow.

FIFTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Saturday, 13 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this day at 11 a.m. in the Hall of Special Audience in the Palace at Delhi. The President, Members, Interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-General are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas. Mukund Lal, the ex-King's Secretary, is called into Court, and examined on his former affirmation.

Question.—Who were the personal attendants of the King who used to talk in this way?

Answer.—Basant Ali Khan, and the whole body of them.

Question.—How many days previous to the outbreak were they talking in this way?

Answer.—Four days.

Question.—According to your statement, it appears that Mirza Haidar Shikoh took part in the consultation relative to the correspondence with Persia; but it is known that the King complained against Mirza Haidar Shikoh for having calumniated him at Lucknow; how do you explain this?

Answer.—This was merely a deception adopted as a precaution against the chance of the true state of affairs coming to light, so that what should happen it might be brought forward as proof that there could be no combination, but on the contrary dissension between the two parties.

Question.—By whose orders were the ladies and children that were prisoners in the palace murdered?

Answer.—These people were being collected for three days: on the fourth day, the infantry and cavalry soldiers, accompanied by Mirza Moghal, came to the entrance of the King's private apartments, and requested the King's permission to kill them. The King was at this time in his own apartments: Mirza Moghal and Basant Ali Khan went inside while the soldiery remained without; they returned in about 20 minutes, when Basant Ali Khan publicly and in a loud voice, proclaimed that the King had given his permission for the slaughter of the prisoners, and that they could take them away: accordingly the King's armed retainers, in whose custody the prisoners had been, took them from the place of confinement, and in conjunction with some of the mutinous soldiery, killed them.

Question.—Do you know anything further?

Answer.—After the fighting had commenced, whoever brought in the head of an European soldier, or officer, received a reward of two rupees.

Question.—On any occasion was any soldier or officer taken prisoner and brought in alive?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Previous to this outbreak, had the Mahomedans entered into any conspiracy or combination to bring about this insurrection?

Answer.—When the mutineers arrived here, the Mahomedans joined them at once:—is it not true that from this that some combination must have previously existed between them?—but it was only the lower and not the higher orders that joined them.

Question.—Can you name any men among the higher classes of the Mahomedans that did not join in rebellion against the British Government?—the King and all the princes most certainly did so.

Answer.—
Answer.—My former answer was in allusion to the day of the outbreak, and not to anything which occurred subsequently.

Question.—Who were the persons that were admitted to the private confidential conferences with the King?

Answer.—Mahbub Ali Khan, an eunuch and prime minister, Hasan Askari the priest, Zinat Mahall, the favourite queen, Nani Begam, the prisoner’s daughter, Agha Begam, another daughter of the prisoner, and Ashraf-un-nissa, one of the King’s wives, and when there was a necessity for anything being written, it was done by the King’s special secretariat office under the direction of the physician Ahson Ulla Khan, and a person who was by caste a Kayastha, but had the same name as myself, viz. Mukund Lal.

Question.—Persian papers, Nos. 2, 3, and 4, arranged under the head of “Murder,” are shown to witness, and he is asked if he recognises the handwriting of them?

Answer.—I do not. They may have been written in the new office set up by Subadar Bakht Khan; one of his writers, a moulavy, used to prepare the papers and bring them to have the King’s seal affixed.

Question.—Were you never admitted to the private confidential conferences of the King?

Answer.—No.

Question.—How, then, did you become aware of what you have related, in reference to the mission to Persia?

Answer.—I used to remain in attendance on Mahbub Ali Khan, the minister. I was a servant of the King, but was attached especially to the service of Mahbub Ali Khan, and used to hear some subjects of confidence from him.

Question.—Was it generally supposed in the palace that Hasan Askari had great influence with the King?

Answer.—Yes, not only in the palace, but throughout the city also, it was known that Hasan Askari, the priest, and Mahbub Ali Khan, exercised the greatest influence over the King.

Question.—Was not one of the daughters of the King a disciple of Hasan Askari, and was either of the two you have mentioned as admitted to the confidential conference the one alluded to?

Answer.—A daughter of the King’s, named Nawab Begam, the wife of Mirza Zaman Shah, had become a disciple of Hasan Askari, but she died 1½ years ago; the other two I have named did not professedly become his disciples, but they always showed great faith in his sanction.

Question.—Did the prisoner on any occasion go out of the palace for the purpose of encouraging the troops to fight against the English?

Answer.—Yes, two days after the assault, viz., on the 16th September he went in an open litter in the direction of the magazine, at the head of the army; but had scarcely proceeded 200 yards beyond the palace, when he halted for an hour, and then returned, the army in the meantime dispersing.

Question.—Do you know what induced the prisoner to halt after proceeding so short a distance, and to what was it generally attributed?

Answer.—He had gone out with the army in order to dislodge the British from the city; when the troops became engaged, he stayed to encourage them.

Question.—Did the King habitually peruse the paper, called the “Sadik-ul-Akhabar”?

Answer.—I can’t say as to his always reading it; but this paper and others used to come to him.

Question.—Was there more than usual agitation and excitement among the Musulmans of Delhi against the British rule some few months before the outbreak?

Answer.—I don’t know.

Question.—Were you in the habit of reading the “Authentic News,” the “Sadik-ul-Akhabar?”

Answer.—No, I never read it.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

Examined by Court.

Question.—Were any persons of the Hindu faith admitted to the private confidential conferences of the prisoner, except Mukund Lal Kayastha?

Answer.—No, no other Hindu was so trusted.

Question.—Are you aware whether any emmissaries were despatched from Delhi, after the outbreak, to induce the native regiments that had not at that time revolted, to come and join the mutineers in Delhi?

Answer.—I don’t know.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you in Delhi on the 10th of May last?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Did you on that day see or hear any carriage, such as is used for travelling post, go into the lines of your regiment; if so, state all the circumstances?

Answer.—Yes, about 3 p.m. on Sunday the 10th of May, I heard a bugle, and the sound of of carriage wheels pass my door. This being very unusual where I resided, I told a servant of mine to run out and see if any one was coming to my house. He went and returned immediately, and said it was a carriage with natives going towards the lines. My house being a corner one, the carriage was obliged to pass three sides of the grounds; so before it passed the second side, I directed the same servant to run to the lines and give my salaam to the subordinate major of the regiment, and say I wanted to see him, for it occurred to me that he and the other native officers of my regiment who had been to Meerut on court martial duty, must be returning in this carriage. The servant returned shortly afterwards, and said, There are a great number of natives in the carriage from Meerut, but none belonging to our regiment, by which I distinctly understood he alluded to soldiers.

Question.—What did you witness on the 11th of May?

Answer.—On the morning of the 11th of May, I think about nine o'clock, one of my servants rushed into the room, and said, Lieutenant Holland had sent over to say that troops were marching on Delhi. I put on my uniform and went over to him. He joined me, and we then went together to Lieutenant Gambier, the adjutant, where we met Colonel Krayett, commanding the regiment, Captain Gardner and the brigade-major, Captain Nicoll, and I then learnt that mutineers were marching from Meerut on to Delhi; and I was ordered to proceed at once to the lines, and take my own company along with Captain Gardner's. Completing them to the strength of 200 men, with the usual allowance of ammunition in pouch, I was then ordered to proceed to a house on the ridge above the new powder magazine, outside the city, and to be very particular that no body of men crossed over from the opposite side of the river. Captain Gardner and I went immediately to the lines; we found the men of our companies rather excited, and it was with some slight difficulty that we succeeded in completing each of our companies to 100 strong. A slight delay now took place in serving out the ammunition, and after sending repeatedly to the magazine to ascertain the cause, I went myself, and the khallisses said, "What can we do? the sepoyos about here who have come for ammunition are quarrelling and squabbling with us about the cartridges and caps, and we cannot give either without counting them." I hurried the work and returned to the company. When the cartridges and caps were being served out, many of the men seized more bundles than they were entitled to; therefore, to prevent further delay at the time, I had those men marked, that I might punish them afterwards. Captain Gardner also remarked to me that the men of his company showed the same anxiety to secure more ammunition than they were entitled to. The order was now given to the companies to march. Both Captain Gardner and myself remarked the excited manner in which the men left the lines, shouting vehemently every now and then, and which neither of us could prevent. I wish here to record a circumstance that occurred on the morning of the 11th, but which I have omitted mentioning. There was a brigade parade that morning to hear the sentence of a general court martial read regarding a native officer, Ishwari Pandé, at Barrackpore, when I remarked a murmur of disapprobation throughout the whole regiment. Though it lasted but a few seconds, it struck me forcibly as something extraordinary, never before witnessed anything like it before. When we arrived at the house over the magazine, I placed sentinels at different points which commanded the bend of the river. The rest of the men, after piling arms, I took into the house; it was a very hot day, and as some of our men had procured water melons and some sweetmeats, they brought them to us, and insisted on our partaking of them; both Captain Gardner and myself remarked the great attention our men were paying us. In the meantime, we were called out to see fires that were everywhere and then appearing in the city. Shortly after this, we heard a report of cannon. All this we could not account for. Captain Gardner remarked to me how lucky it was that our men seemed so well disposed, as we were convinced that there was something serious going on in the city, particularly as we remembered the fires that had broken out in Ambala and other places. We now remarked that our men were forming small groups in the heat of the sun. I ordered them to come in, and not expose themselves thus. They said, "We like being in the sun." I ordered them in again. When I went into one of the rooms, I remarked, for the first time, a native, from his appearance a soldier, haranguing the men of the companies, and saying that every power or government existed their allotted time, and that it was nothing extraordinary that of the English had come to an end, according to what had been predicted in their native books. Before I could make a prisoner of him, the magazine in the city exploded, and then the men of the two companies, with a tremendous shout took up their arms and ran off to the city, exclaiming, "Pritibi Raj Ki Jai!" or "Victory to the Sovereign of the World."

Question.—Did you notice anything before the 10th of May, that led you to suppose that the sepoyos of your regiment were disaffected?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Did any other circumstance come to your notice from which you might infer that a disturbance at Delhi had been expected before it broke out?

Answer.—Yes, one of my old servants, a man who had been about 26 years in our family, was about this time going on leave, and when I urged him particularly to return, he on several occasions, with a sorrowful expression, said, "Yes, sir, provided your hearth is still in existence," that is, provided you and your family are in a condition to give me service. He made use of these expressions about a week or 10 days before the outbreak. He left me about this time, and I have not seen or heard from him since.

Question.—Was your son some time before the outbreak here in May last in the habit of riding and exercising the horses of the prisoner's son, Jawan Bakht?
Answer.—Yes, he had done so for five or six years.

Question.—What was the age of your son?
Answer.—He was about 19.

Question. A short time before the outbreak, did he complain to you of any language used to him by the prisoner's son, Jawan Bakht?
Answer.—In the latter end of the month of April 1857, he came from Mr. Fraser's office, where he used to write, and told me that he had that day gone in the morning to the prime minister's house as usual, and had there seen the prisoner's son, Jawan Bakht, who resided in that quarter, and that this Jawan Bakht had then told him that he was not to come again; that he did not like to see the face of an English infidel, and that before many days he would have them all killed and under his feet. Jawan Bakht then spit at him. My son told Mr. Fraser of it at the time, but Mr. Fraser replied that he was a fool, and was not to listen to such nonsense. After this, as far as I recollect, about the 2d of May, the prime minister sent for my son, to pay him up, and on this occasion again, the prisoner's son, Jawan Bakht, abused him still more, saying he would have his head off in a few days. This son of mine was killed in the place here during the rebellion.

The President, Members, Interpreter, and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court, attended by his attorney, Gulam Abbas.

Captain Martineau, of the 10th Native Infantry, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Were you at Ambala from January till May 1857, as instructor of musketry at the depot there?
Answer.—Yes, I was.

Question.—Did a detachment of sepoys from every native regiment in India attend at this depot for the purpose of receiving instruction in musketry?
Answer.—Not from every native regiment, but five men from 44 of the native regiments attended.

Question.—Had you any conversation with these men relative to some chaplains that were circulated to different villages in these districts before the outbreak?
Answer.—Yes, I had frequent conversations with various sepoys on this subject. I asked them what they understood in reference to them, and by whom they supposed that they were circulated; they described them to me as being in size and shape like ship biscuits, and believed them to have been distributed, by order of Government, through the medium of their servants, for the purpose of intimidating the people of Hindustan that they should be all compelled to eat the same food; and that was considered as a token that they would likewise be compelled to embrace one faith, or, as they termed it, "One food and one faith."

Question.—As far as you could understand, was this idea generally prevalent among all the sepoys of the various detachments at the depot?
Answer.—It was prevalent, as far as I could judge, among all the sepoys of every regiment that furnished a detachment to the depot at Ambala.

Question.—Was there any report of the Government having mixed ground bones with flour for the purpose of having it distributed to the sepoys, and so destroying their caste?
Answer.—Yes, I first heard of this in the month of March. It was told me that all the flour retailed from the Government depots for the supply of troops on the march was so adulterated.

Question.—Do you think the sepoys generally firmly believed in this?
Answer.—I have seen correspondence from various men which the sepoys of the depot voluntarily placed in my hands, the writers of which, themselves sepoys, evidently believed that such was the case.

Question.—Did the sepoys ever speak to you about any other cause of complaint or points on which they sought information?
Answer.—Their complaint or rather fear was this. They apprehended that Government was going forcibly to deprive them of their caste.

Question.—
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

Question.—Did any of them ever speak about Government interference regarding the remarriage of Hindu widows?

Answer.—Yes, they alluded to that as an invasion of their social rights.

Question.—Did any of them refer to the annexation of Oudh, as a measure indicating that Government wished to annihilate all the native independent states?

Answer.—At Ambala the subject was occasionally alluded to, as if it were not agreeable to them; but subsequently at Karnaul some troopers of the 3d Cavalry, about a week after the mutiny, on my speaking to them about the revolt of their comrades, said to me, “You have conquered and absorbed everything in Hindustan, you have no more foreign countries to take, and now you have determined upon a crusade against our religion and our faith”. I was on duty as commissariat officer at Karnaul at this time, and the men of the 3d Cavalry, to whom I am alluding, were those that have remained faithful.

Question.—Did you ever hear any of the sepoys speak complainingly of the efforts of English missionaries to convert natives to Christianity?

Answer.—No, never in my life; I don’t think they cared one bit about it.

Question.—Were the cartridges which the sepoys were called on to use at the depot at Ambala in any way greased?

Answer.—No, not as issued from the magazines. They were not allowed to touch any that had been greased previous to distribution; they greased their own cartridges with a composition of ghi, that is, clarified butter and bees’ wax; these materials they themselves purchased from natives, whenever they pleased to get them.

Question.—Did you observe any difference in making complaints about forcible deprivation of their religion between the Hindus and Musalmans?

Answer.—Yes, as far the cartridge question went the Mahomedan sepoys laughed at it; it was only the Hindus that made the complaints in reference to losing caste; but in regard to those who spoke of the annexation of Oudh as a grievance, I can’t say whether they were Mahomedans or not.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

Examined by Court.

Question.—Did you observe anything peculiar in the conduct of the sepoys under your command previous to the outbreak, or any intimation of what was about to take place?

Answer.—Yes, they told me in plain language that there would be an outbreak; and there was every evidence of it in nightly fires at Ambala. The first fire commenced on the very day we fired the first Enfield cartridge, and continued nearly nightly up to the 10th of May. We commenced using the Enfield cartridges on the 17th of April; the men themselves remarked that although Government offered large rewards to any one who would give information of the incendiaries, yet no one was found to do so; and that this was a certain sign of general dissatisfaction and some impending outbreak. I made a public report to the above effect to army head-quarters then present at Ambala, and I also made a private representation of the same kind to Captain Septimus Becher, assistant adjutant-general of the army.

The witness withdraws.

Mrs. Fleming, Wife of Sergeant Fleming, is called into Court, and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—In the end of April last were you in the house of Zinat Mahull, the prisoner’s wife, and did you there see his son Jawan Bakht?

Answer.—Yes.

Question.—Relate what passed on that occasion?

Answer.—I was sitting down with his sister-in-law, and Jawan Bakht was standing by with his wife. My own daughter, Mrs. Scully, was also present. I was talking with Jawan Bakht’s sister-in-law, when Mrs. Scully said to me, “Mother, do you hear what this young rascal is saying? he is telling me that in a short time he will have all the infidel English under his feet, and after that he will kill the Hindus.” Hearing this, I turned round to Jawan Bakht, and asked him, “What is that you are saying?” He replied that he was only joking. I said, “If what you threaten were to be the case, your head would be taken off first.” He told me that the Persians were coming to Delhi, and that when they did so, we, that is myself and daughter, should go to him, and he would save us. After this he left us. I think this must have occurred about the middle of April, 1857.

Copies of newspapers written by Chuni Lal, news-writer, from the 11th to the 20th of May (both dates inclusive) having been seized in his house, are here read in original, and the translation of them is also read and entered as follows:

NARRATIVE of Occurrences in Delhi, from 11th to 20th May 1857, both Dates inclusive, in the Form of a Diary, by Chuni Lal, News-writer.

Some time during the night of the 10th May 1857, Mr. Fraser received a letter from Meerut, intimating the mutinous conduct of the infantry and cavalry there; but he did not make any arrangements then. In the morning, intelligence arrived that the 3rd Cavalry and two regiments of native infantry had had a fight at Meerut on account of the cartridges, and were coming to Delhi, when Mr. Fraser immediately directed the orderly to call the agent of the correspondent of the Times. Sir Theophilus Metcalfe at the same time came into the city, and directed the chief police officer to place guards of the constabulary force at the gates and to have them closed: the police officer carried out these orders immediately. Mr. Fraser also came into the city in his buggy, accompanied by the troopers of the Jhajjar cavalry, constituting his personal guard. It was now ascertained that some cavalry men had arrived at the bridge, and had murdered the toll-collector, setting fire to his house. One of the troopers was very insolent to the Commandant of the Palace Guards, and fired a pistol at him, but without effect. The troopers above referred to collected under the palace windows, and telling the King they had come to fight for the faith, requested him to have the gate at this point opened for them. The King immediately sent word to the Commandant of the Palace Guards that some troopers had come from Meerut, and were bent on causing a disturbance. On receiving this message, Captain Douglas at once came to the King, and addressing the troopers told them they were offending, and directed them to go away. They replied they would settle with him. Mr. Fraser, in the meantime, came to the Cashmere Gate and reasoned with the guard there, telling them they had been nurtured in the service of the East India Company; that some mutinous troops had come from Meerut, and that he required them to assist him in making arrangements. They however, refused, saying that had he met with the same, they would have had no objection to内容被截断，无法完整阅读 two guns from Daryâ Granj, and loading them with stones, fired them at the gates, the Europeans within returning the fire from several pieces with grape. Subsequently the magazine blew up, when several of the men of the city were killed, and many of the houses in the neighbourhood destroyed. The Europeans, men and women, who had been in the magazine, fled in the direction of the river; they were, however, pursued by the cavalry, and killed. Three sergeants and two women were brought prisoners to the King. One of the sergeants begged the King's protection for himself and fellow-prisoners, saying that otherwise they would be killed by the mutineers, and the King had them placed in the House of Devotion. At about half-an-hour before sunset, Rajah Nahar Singh, taking his wife, his brother, and his brother-in-law, and Mr. Munro in disguise, left for Ballabhgarh. The infantry mutineers attacked the house of Saligram, the treasurer, but were unable to force its massive gates till midnight, when they made an entrance, and in conjunction with the Mahomedans of the city, plundered the place of all the property it contained. Some Europeans were taking away two guns from the cantonments, but the cavalry came up with them and brought the guns back. There was a salute of 21 guns fired under the palace, and all night throughout the city the greatest uneasiness and tumult continued to prevail in consequence of the plunder, pillage, and burning of houses.

Tuesday, 12 May 1857.—The King came into the hall of Special Audience, where the chiefs paid their respects. The subadar of the 54th Regiment waited on the King, and begged that some person might be appointed to arrange for the daily supplies. Ramnahay Mall and Dilwani Mall were accordingly to provide 500 rupees worth of meal, pulse and gourds, daily, and to have them conveyed to the regiments. Four European gentlemen were concealed in the house of Muhammad Ibrahim, son of Ali Muhammad, merchant. The troops hearing this went there, and killing the Europeans, plundered the house. A European woman, dressed as a native, was going along near the Ellenborough tank, and was killed by the troops. The infantry soldiers forcibly entered and plundered the shops of the confectioners in all the streets of the city. On hearing this the King appointed his Mirza, formerly police officer of Paharganj, to the government of the city, and sent him to the chief police-office with a regiment of infantry, directing him to make arrangements to prevent plunder and pillage. The Mirza represented that the soldiers were then engaged plundering the Churi Bazaar. On this the King sent for the subadar of all the infantry regiments, and directed them to place one regiment at the Delhi gate of the city, and one under the palace windows, one company each at the Ajmir, Lahore, Tarar Khana, Cashmere and other gates, and one company in the Daryâ Bazaar, saying that he did not approve of his subjects being plundered. After this the infantry and cavalry made an attack on the Nagar-Seth street, with the view of plundering it. The inhabitants closed the gates and attacked the soldiers with brickbats, and drove them off. Several clerks with their wives had taken refuge in the house known as that of Rajah Kalyan Singh, of Kishan Garh. The soldiers went and attacked them with carbines and pistols. The Europeans defended themselves with their firearms. The troops then brought two pieces of artillery against them, when the clerks, with their wives, retired to an apartment underground, and the troops came away. The King directed Mirza Moghal to take a company of infantry, and adopt steps to prevent the plunder in the city. Mirza Moghal accordingly went to the principal police stations, seated on an elephant, and had personal conviction of plunder would be punished with the loss of nose and ears; and all shopkeepers not opening their shops, and refusing to supply the soldiers, would be fined and imprisoned. Her Excellency the Queen Taj Mahall was released from confinement. Two European gentlemen going along in the disguise of natives were killed by the troopers in front of the chief police station. The King seated on an elephant, with Jawan Bakht in the hind seat, and accompanied by two regiments of infantry and several troops of the principal streets of the city, opened directions to the shopkeepers to resume their occupations, and supply the army with necessaries, and then returned to the palace. Hasan Ali now obtained a presentation through Ahsan Ulla Khan. He submitted an offering of one gold mohur, and was directed to remain in attendance, the King remarking that he wished to have a conference with him. The King bestowed a dress of honour on Mirza Manir-ud-din Khan on his appointment to the government of Delhi. The Mirza presented four rupees as earnest of his thankfulness.

Wednesday, 13 May 1857.—The King came to his House of Devotion. The Chiefs paid their respects. The chamberlain, Hasan Mirza, was ordered to bring Mirza Amir-ud-din Khan. The chamberlain returned and reported that the Mirza was unwell, and was, in consequence, unable to attend. Mirza Manir-ud-din Khan, chief police officer, was told that the necessaries of food were not supplied to the army, and was directed to make arrangements. Hasan Ali Khan being in attendance, the King said to him, “The army has collected in the palace; what is to be done?” The said Khan replied that these soldiers were murderers, who had killed their masters, and that they could not with prudence be trusted. Shah Nizam-ud-din, a descendant of the priests, and Budhan Sahib, son of Nawab Muhammad Khan, deceased, were ordered to join in the deliberative conferences. Mirza Moghal, Mirza Khair Sultan, Mirza Abdulla, &c., were appointed colonels of regiments of infantry, and were directed to proceed severally with two guns each to the Cashmere, Lahore, and Delhi gates to preserve order. Shah Nizam-ud-din represented that the cavalry had seized Nawab Mir Hamid Ali Khan at his house, and had brought him on foot to the jewel room to the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan, on the plea that the said Mir had concealed some Englishmen in his house, although the Mir affirmed that he was ready to acknowledge himself an offender if any Europeans should be discovered so concealed. On this the King directed Shah Nizam-ud-din to go with the cavalry and infantry, and allow Mir Hamid Ali Khan's house to be searched. Shah Nizam-ud-din and Mirza Abulbakra accordingly went and made a search, and no Englishmen or Eurasians being found in the house, they had the property restored which had been plundered by the cavalry and infantry, the said Mir being at the same time released. Mirza Abulbakra was appointed colonel of the cavalry regiment. Intelligence was brought that 29 persons, clerks, women, and children, were concealed in the house of Rajah Kalyan Singh of Kishangarh, and the cavalry and infantry going and making them prisoners, shot them with volleys of musketry. Some cavalry men went to the house of Colonel Skinner, seized and brought away the son of Mr. Joseph Skinner, and killed him in front of the chief. Intelligence came to the king that several persons, the cavalry and infantry went to the houses of Narayan Das and Ram Charan Das, deputy collector, and alleging that Europeans were concealed there, plundered them of all personal property. Kazi Panu and his son were killed by some of the infantry soldiers. Two English gentlemen, dressed as natives, were going out by the Badarun Gate, and were killed by some cavalry men. The King presented all the regiments with 400 rupees each for their expenses. Mirza Manir-ud-din, chief police officer, had it publicly proclaimed, that all such persons as wished to take service should come forward, bringing their own arms, and that all those in whose houses Europeans should be found would be dealt with as offenders. Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan and Waliudd Khan, of Malagurth, attended agreeably to summons, and paid their respects, and were ordered to attend court daily. The King summoned the principal grain-dealers, and ordered them to regulate their granaries, and to commence selling the grain in the market. Mirza Manir-ud-din Khan having entertained some 200 men, has placed them in the Daryâ, the principal street, and other parts of the city, for the preservation of the peace. Two water-carriers, who stole some butter from a shop-keeper in the street, called the Lal Kunwa, were taken up. Kulî Khan and Safdar Khan, two notorious bad characters, as well as some men accused of having committed acts of plunder in Teliwara and Sabzi Mandi, were also apprehended.

Thursday, 14 May 1857.—The King came from his private apartments into the Hall of Devotion. The chamberlain, Hasan Mirza, Captain Dikdar Ali Khan, and Hassan Ali Khan, and according to summons, Mirza Manir-ud-din Khan, Mirza Zia-ud-din Khan, and Moulavi Sadr-ud-din Khan were in attendance, and paid their respects. The moulavy presented one gold mohur. The King told him to conduct the duties of the civil and judicial courts. The moulavy, however, requested that he might be excused. After this the treasurer Saligram attended according to orders, and presented one gold mohur. The King inquired what amount of money there was in the principal treasury. He replied he did not know. The King then directed him to send an agent of his to the treasurer. The treasurer said he would do so. Rahmat Ali Khan was introduced by Hasan Ali Khan, and presented one gold mohur. The King asked who he was, and was informed that he was the son of Nawab Faiz Muhammad Khan, and nephew of Hasan Ali Khan, who had presented him. Muhammad Ali Khan, son of Sar Jang Khan, presented one gold mohur. The King inquired who he was, and was informed he was the nephew of Bahadur Jang Khan, the chief of Daddi.

The confidential agent of the chief of Sanwot presented himself and submitted that the chief was unwell, and had therefore been unable to come to court, and intended going to Jaipur. An order was accordingly written to the address of Raja Ram Singh, ruler of Jaipur, directing his early attendance at court with his army, and the confidential agent above said, declaring he would leave for Jaipur immediately. After this, orders were respectively issued in writing to Nawab Abdul Rahman Khan, of Jhajjar; Bahadur Jang Khan, of Durlâ; Akbar Ali Khan, of Pantadih; Raja Nahar Singh, of Ballabhgarh; Hasan Ali Khan, of Dojana; and Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan, of Farokhnagar, directing their attendance at court. Orders were also issued to Mirza Amin-ud-din Khan and Mirza Zia-ud-din Khan to look after the management of the district of Jhirké Firozpur and that of Gurgoon, which was lying unoccupied. Intelligence was received that the goojurs of Chand Rawal were every night plundering the shops in Sabzi Mandi, Teliwara, Rajpur, Mandera, &c., and Mirza Moghal was ordered to suppress these evil practices of the said goojurs. Mirza Abulbakra accordingly went to the village in question with his regiment of cavalry, and had it plundered and burnt. Bahadur Singh, superintendent of the landed property belonging to the Lucknow State, presented an offering of one gold mohur. A European soldier who came as a spy from a European soldier who had brought before the King, and was by him ordered to be sent to the jail. A European woman was likewise brought, and she also was sent to the jail. Some subsadars and infantry soldiers, having their shoes on, came and stood on the carpets, and the King reprehended their conduct with anger and disgrace. An order was issued to Manir-ud-din Khan, chief police officer, to take the 38th Regiment Native Infantry, and to proceed to the Delhi cantonment, and to make arrangements to prevent the depredations being committed there, in Sabzi Mandi, Pahari Darurrung and other places. Four men coming from Meerut told the soldiers that European troops were on their way from that station for their extermination. The soldiers were not pleased at this intelligence, and placed the four men in question in arrest. The police officer of the Nigamboodh section was ordered to have the corpses of Mr. Fraser and Captain Douglas buried in the graveyard, and those of the European men and women thrown into the river. This order was accordingly carried into effect.
Gojurs have plundered and carried away all the furniture of Mr. Fraser's house, and have torn up the whole of the records of the Commissionership, and of the agency to the Lieutenant-governor.

Friday, 15 May 1857.—The King was in his private apartments, and Moulavy Abdul Kadir submitted a list he had prepared of the pay of the troops. His Majesty bestowed a pair of shawls on the Moulavy on account of his appointment to the situation of assistant to Nawab Mahbub Ali Khan. The Moulavy then went home seated on an elephant. The agent of the chief, Sheo Singh of Samnott, presented a bottle of the extract of the Pan- donus Adoratisusmarus, and a phial of essential oil on the part of the client, and received a written order to the address of the Rajah of Jaipur directi.ing his attendance. Chulam Nabi Khan, superintendent of the Kaulah Mahall, accompanied by Mir Akbar Ali, trooper, who used to remain in attendance on Mr. Fraser, came into the royal presence and stated that 50 horsemen who had been sent by the Nawab of Jhajjar were in attendance, but that the nawab himself had not been able to come in consequence of the unsettled and disturbed state of his territory. Moulavy Ahmad Ali attended on the part of Rajah Nabar Singh of Ballabhgarh, and presented an offering of one rupee, together with a petition, in which the rajah submitted that he was unable to present himself at court in consequence of the plunder and violence the Gojurs were carrying on; but that he will attend the royal presence after making provision for the suppression of these evils. Orders were issued for his early attendance. Intelligence was received that the magistrate of Rohtak had run away, and that that treasury, it was likely, would soon be plundered. It was ascertained that the treasury had been plundered. On the king ordered that one regiment of infantry and some troopers should go and bring away the money in the Rohtak treasury. Orders were issued to Abdul Karim to enlist 400 foot soldiers and one regiment of cavalry, the pay of each foot soldier to be five, and that of each trooper 20 rupees per mensum; about 200 men have accordingly been entertained. The printer, Abdul Kadir, presented some papers for the King’s inspection, and said he would make every effort. An order was issued by the King to the officers of the cavalry, intimating that Mirza Abulbakr had been dismissed from the command of their corps, and that they would remain under the orders of the King. Kazi Faiz Ullacame before the King and presented an offering of five rupees, and a petition requesting he might be appointed chief police officer of the city, and his request was granted. A goldsmith killed a man of the same trade against whom he had an enmity, and was apprehended. The Mewatis of Jaisinghpura had plundered the house of the railway officer of 4,000 rupees in cash, and other property. The cavalry and infantry were accordingly arranging to go and seize the Mewatis, and to destroy Jaisinghpura, when the confidential agent of Lalla Budh Singh, the agent of the Rajah of Jaipur, presented a petition claiming the King’s protection for the population of Jaisinghpura. An order was passed on this petition that no soldier of the cavalry or infantry was to be permitted to go to Jaisinghpura without the king’s orders. Information was submitted that the soldiers of the cavalry and infantry, as a practice, patrolled the bazaars, streets, and lanes of the city, with drawn swords, and that the shops in the bazaars were not opened in consequence of the dread this inspired. Hearing this, the King sent orders to the gates of the palace, enjoining that no person should go about the city with a drawn sword. An order was issued to the commandant of the Jhajjar cavalry to take up his quarters in the Mahat garden. It was reported that 14 boats laden with goods belonging to Ramjidas Gurwals, had arrived in the city, and an order was thereupon issued to Dilwani Mall, appointed to arrange for supplies, to have the cargo of the said boats landed and to bring it away. Two infantry soldiers had secured 200 rupees, and lodged the money with the firm of Ramjidas Gurwals, arranging that they should receive it in Lucknow. The two soldiers, however, happened to have a disagreement when the matter transpired, and a company immediately went to the house of the banker, who at once gave up the money. An order was issued to the merchants of the city directing their attendance. The cavalry and infantry, after a consultation amongst themselves, came to the hall of special audience, and complained that they did not get their allowances of pay and clothing, and stated their conviction that the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan and Mahbub Ali Khan were in collusion with the British. The troopers and infantry then went off to the house known as the Haveli Lal Kum, and accused the priest, Shah Nizam-ud-din, of having two European ladies concealed in his residence. Shah Nizam-ud-din replied that he should be confronted with their informant, and the troopers presented some man who was a resident of Rampoor, and who said his story had been hearsay. Shah Nizam-ud-din now told the troopers that they should be at liberty to plunder his house and kill him if they should discover any European women there; but if their real object, whether or not in this false accusation was to do so, of course they had the power. In reply to this the troopers had nothing to say. Mahbub Ali Khan then made oath on the Kurun that he was not in collusion with the British. The soldiers plundered and carried away all the property from the house of Agha Muhammad Khan.

Saturday, 16 May 1857.—The King came into the hall of special audience and held a court. The physician Ahsan Ulla Khan, the paymaster Agha Sultan, captain Dildar Ali Khan, Rahmat Ali Khan and other chiefs attended and paid their respects. The troopers and infantry soldiers, accompanied by their officers, attended and presented a letter bearing the seals of the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan, and Nawab, they had apprehended at the Delhi gate of the city, and complained that the physician and nawab had sent this letter to the English, inviting them to come into the city immediately, and promising that, provided the English should agree to acknowledge Mirza Jawan Bakht, the son of the King by the Queen Zinat Mahall, as heir-apparent, they would on their part engage to seize and make over all the soldiers now in Delhi. This document was shown to Ahsan Ulla Khan and Nawab Mahbub Ali Khan, who declared it was a forgery, got up by some person, and the impressions on it were from counterfeit seals of gypsum, and they took off their signet rings and threw them before the soldiers. They further swore by the Kuran that the seals on the paper were not theirs, and that the document was a forgery. However, the soldiers would not believe their assertions. Some persons told the troopers that a number of Europeans were concealed in one of the covered drains of the canal. Hearing this, Mirza Adbulakar, accompanied by the troopers, went to the place indicated, and, jumping into the drain, discharged his pistol in it; but no Europeans were discovered. After this, the men of the cavalry and infantry drew their swords and surrounded the physician, Ahsan Ulla Khan, declaring their firm belief that he maintained an understanding with the English. They agreed that it was on that account that he kept the European prisoners, intending that when the English came, he might make them over, and would have the soldiers killed. The matter ended in their taking the Europeans, men, women, and children, 52 in number, from the goal where they were confined, to the reservoir near the music gallery, with the intent to kill them there. The Prince Mirza Majhili attempted to remonstrate, urging that the slaughter of women was not legal, according to the Mahomedan law. The troopers on this resolved to kill the said Mirza, but he ran away and so escaped. They then made the prisoners sit down, and one of them fired his carbine at them. The bullet wounded one of the King's armed retainers. After this, two of the King's personal armed retainers killed the guards of the Europeans, men, women, and children, with their swords. There were about 200 Musulmans standing at the reservoir, uttering the coarsest abuse against the prisoners. The sword of one of the King's armed retainers broke. After the slaughter, the bodies were laden on two carts, and thrown into the river. This occurrence caused a great excitement amongst the Hindus throughout the city, who said that these purbes who had committed this heinous and atrocious cruelty could never be victorious against the English. The companies at the gates were relieved. Some one informed the troopers that some Europeans were concealed in the house of the treasurer, Mathura Das, and in the street known as the Chowdhary-Ka-Kuchna. They accordingly made a search, but returned without finding any. The troopers did not aggravate any one on this occasion. An order was written to Wallad Khan, of Malaghar, noticing the anarchy prevailing on the eastern side of the Jumna, caused by the lawless conduct of the Gojurs, and directing him to go and take such steps to suppress it. Two weavers, in the disguise of infantry soldiers, were engaged plundering in the city, and were apprehended. The shopkeepers of the Lahore Gate submitted a complaint that Kashi Nath, police officer of their section of the town, was demanding a bribe of 1,000 rupees from them, holding out the threat that if they did not give him the money, he would send them as prisoners to the chief police station. The physician Ahsan Ulla Khan accordingly sent an order to Kazi Faiz Ulla to place the said police officer under arrest.

Sunday, 17 May 1857.—The King was in his private apartments; the men of the cavalry and infantry, accompanied by their officers, submitted that they had fortified Salingar, and that they trusted his Majesty would go there and inspect what had been done. The King accordingly went in an open litter, saw how the guns had been placed in position, and then returned, assuring the soldiers that he was associated with them in a common cause, desiring them to place every confidence in the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan, Mahbub Ali Khan, and the Queen Zinat Mahall, and telling them he would stay with his own hands any Europeans they might seize and bring to him. On hearing this the troops were convinced, and the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan was fully exulted. A man was seized at the bridge with a letter he was bringing from some European at Meerut. The infantry soldiers tied him to a gun, and let him remain there. The mutineers had taken up their quarters in the hall of special audience, whence they have been made to remove, and the hall has been done up anew with carpets, hangings, &c. Mirza Amin-ud-din Khan and Mirza Zia-ud-din Khan attended agreeably to summons, and paid their respects. Being ordered to attend court daily, they pleaded sickness. The King then directed them to raise troops, saying that large dominions should be conferred on them, and they replied they would do so. After this Iradat Khan and Mir Khan, brothers of Nawab Mustafa Khan of Jahangirnab, Akhbar Khan and others attended and presented offerings of two rupees each. The disposal of the colonelles of the infantry regiments was next considered. A trooper arrived from Garkhi Harsoori, and reported that several lakhs of rupees, being revenue of the Gurgoon district, was on its way to Delhi; escorted by a company of infantry and some troopers, and that near 300 Mewatis and Gojurs of that part of the country had made an attack upon this treasure, and that a fight was going on. On this intelligence Moulay Muhammad Bakar, of the press, was directed to go out immediately with two companies of infantry and one troop of cavalry, in order to oppose the Gojurs, and to bring the treasure in safety. The infantry soldiers beat a sweater in the service of Mirza Moghal very severely, on the imputation of being a spy. They, however, released him on Mirza Moghal's orders. A report was made that some of the Mewatis of Jaisinghpura who had plundered the house of the railway superintendent had been wounded: it was ascertained that these men had been in the service of the English. The landholders of the village of Nadhowi attended, and, presenting a rupee each, made professions of their loyalty and allegiance. The King told them to keep up a proper management in their village, failing which which they would be expropriated. Two of the King's messengers who had been sent for intelligence, returned from Meerut and reported that about 1,000 European soldiers, with some other English, men, women and children, were collected there in the Sudder bazaar, and that they had erected fortifications on the Suraj Kund, on which they had mounted guns drawn by elephants. They further represented that the Goojurs were committing highway robberies all along the road from Meerut to Salimgarh, and had maltreated them also. On receiving this information, two companies of infantry stationed at the palace over the Jumna. The physician Abdul Hak attended and presented five rupees. Five companies of the Sappers and Miners had come to Meerut from Roorkee. The Europeans required them to remain and perform duties there. To this the men objected, and the English attacked them in consequence. Many men were killed; and, in the end, the Sappers and Miners ran away, and have come to Delhi. Several missives were written and dispatched by them, directing early and immediate attack, to prevent the raising of troops. Raja Nareendra Singh, of Patiala, Raja Ramsingh of Jaipur, the Raja of Alwar, and the Rajas in Jodhpur, Kota, Bundi, &c. Two children were killed by the falling of the balcony of Dewan Kishan Lal's house. It is reported that troops are coming from Ambala; otherwise everything is quiet.

Monday, 18 May 1857.—The King came from his private apartments into the hall of special audience, and took his seat on the throne in state. The bands of the five regiments attended, and continued playing English music. The King bestowed arms and dresses of honour varying in grandeur, by reference to their appointments, on Mirza Moghal as Commander-in-chief of the whole of the forces, on Mirza Khoaka Sultan, Mirza Mendo, and on others of his sons as colonels of infantry, and on his grandson Abulbakt as colonel of the regiment of cavalry. Mirza Moghal presented two gold mohurs, and the other princes one gold mohur and five rupees each in thankfulness for the honours conferred on them. Hasan Ali Khan attended and paid his respects. He was ordered to attend court regularly every day, and said he would do so. The King then said that a very large body of country would be bestowed on him, and that he was to raise troops, cavalry and infantry. Hasan Ali Khan replied that he could not undertake this, but that he would remain in attendance on his Majesty. The two sons who had been sent with the missive to Alwar returned, and reported that thousands of Goojurs were infesting the road and committing highway robberies; that they had robbed them of their horses, clothes and money; that they had taken the King's letter, and, tearing it up, had put the pieces back into their hands; and that it was after much entreaty and supplication they were prevailed on to give back the horses. A camel-riding was sent with a missive to Nawab Ahmad Ali Khan of Farrukh-nagar returned and reported that the Goojurs would not allow him to go on. The officers of the Sappers and Miners presented themselves and reported that five companies of their corps had come from Roorkee to Meerut; that all the Europeans, with their wives and children, were collected in their entrenchments called the Dum-dum. That the Europeans used every endeavour to tamper with the Sappers and Miners, to dissuade them from coming to Delhi, and to get them to remain at Meerut, and to join in the duties there, promising them an increase of salary, but that they declined listening to those proposals; whenupon the Europeans commenced a fire of grape on them about three o'clock one morning, by which three were killed, and the remainder ran off. It was reported in the morning that many were killed, but that none come to his Majesty's presence. They were ordered to take up their quarters in Salimgarh. Nawab Mahbub Ali Khan having prepared a nominal list of Ramji Das Godownwala, Ramji Das Gurrwalla, the treasurer Saligram, and the other merchant of the city, sent it to them by a confidential agent, with a message that the daily expenses of the troops amounted to 5,000 rupees, and that they were therefore collectively required to provide five hundred of the merchants went to Mahbub Ali Khan, and reported that they were plundered of all they possessed on the outbreak of the troops, and whence now were they to raise the money? Ramji Das said that if Mahbub Ali Khan could get the other merchants to pay, he also would do so. Mirza Abulbakt went with the regiment of cavalry to the villages of Chandrawal and Wazirabad to punish the Goojurs for robberies they were committing; but the Goojurs ran away.

Tuesday, 19 May 1857.—The King came from his private apartments into the hall of special audience. Two troops arrived from Meerut and reported that a force, consisting of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, had come to Meerut, with several lakhs of treasure from Bareilly and Moradabad. The Europeans there complained to them that the Meerut troops had revolted, and, killing numbers of them, had gone off to Delhi. The Bareilly and Moradabad forces replied that the Europeans had taken their revenge by killing three hundred of the Sappers and Miners, and that, no doubt, they (the Bareilly and Moradabad force) would experience similar kindness. On hearing this, the Europeans went into their entrenchments and commenced a cannonade, when the troops from Bareilly and Monday went out of the fire. Through the direction of Colonel, a shot that the latter fired the mine the Europeans had laid, and the whole area enclosed by their entrenchments was blown up. On receiving this intelligence the whole of the troops and the King were highly delighted, and fired five guns at Salimgarh in token of their joy. After this, information arrived that the Collector of Gurgaon, on running away, had left 17,000 rupees at Harsaru Garsi. One hundred troopers and two companies of infantry went thither and took it. It was ordered that all should be lodged in the treasury. A trooper sent by the Bajia Bai arrived and stated that his mistress, not crediting...
crediting the report of the slaughter of the Europeans and their wives, had sent him for certain intelligence. The King told him that all the Europeans here had been exterminated, directing him to return to Gwalior accompanied by two troopers, and carrying a special missive, and to tell the Bai Sahib to come to the royal presence immediately with her troops, and manifest her good-will. After this the king held his court in the hall of special audience. His Majesty bestowed a dress of honour of great grandeur, together with a silver inlaid stand, as an account of his appointment to the premiership, with the title of "Prime minister to the king of the conquered countries" on... The said Mirza presented 10 gold mohurs to show his sense of the honour conferred on him. The King conferred a similar dress of honour on his special son, Mirza Bakhtawar Shah, on his appointment to the colonellecy of the 74th Regiment Native Infantry. The said Mirza presented two gold mohurs and five rupees as his thanks offering. His Majesty further presented each of his sons who had been appointed colonels with a pair of kettle-drums. The chamberlain Hasan Mirza was ordered to present Kunwar Ajit Singh of Patiala. The Kunwar accurately attended and presented one gold mohur. The King said he well knew the Kunwar had always been residing in Delhi, and gave him a dress of honour, and the Kunwar in acknowledgment presented an offering of five rupees. Ahmad Mirza and the son of the physician Abdul Hak attended and presented five rupees each. The Basildar, sent by Muhammad Akhbar Ali Khan, attended and presented an offering of two rupees on his own account, and a petition from his client, stating that, after making necessary arrangements in his territory, he would speedily come to the royal presence. There were two gentlemen, three ladies and a child concealed in the house of Nathu, tailor; the troopers hearing this made them prisoners, and brought them to the palace, and burnt the tailor's house. The King placed these prisoners in the custody of the soldiers. His Majesty went to Salimgarh, where he received a general military salute from the troops. The officers of the 20th Regiment Native Infantry represented that they did not credit the story of the blowing up of the entrenchments at Meerut brought by the two troopers, and that they, therefore, intended to go and blow them up themselves. The King said it was not necessary; but suggested that, if they went, they should do so with the concurrence of their general, Mirza Moghal. An order was issued to Kazi Faiz Ulla, the principal police officer of the city, telling him that two of the boats in the bridge over the Jumna had become displaced, and directing him to send one hundred labourers to restore their lashings. Intelligence was received that several doctors, accompanied by a number of the Mussulman residents of the city, had erected the Mahomedan standard in the Jama Masjid as a declaration of an obligatory war of extermination against the British; and that the doctors having represented the English, who, they said, were infidels, thousands of Mussulmans had joined the standard. The King hearing this sent a message, saying, "All the English have been killed; against whom have you raised this standard?" and directing that it should be removed. Moulavi Sadru-ud-din Khan went to the Jama Masjid and reasoned with the doctors there, and prevailed on them to take the flag down. Several carts of grain, salt, &c., were seized outside the city, and brought in.

Wednesday, 20 May 1857.—The King came from his private apartments into the hall of special audience. The doctor, Muhammad Sayad, attended and exchanged greetings with him. The King remarked that he (the doctor) had erected the Mahomedan standard in the Jama Masjid against the English; but that as they had all killed, there had been no necessity for doing so. The doctor replied that it had been set up against the Hindus. On this, the King remarked that he regarded Hindus and Mahomedans alike, and he was not disposed to acquiesce in a religious war against the Hindus; further remarking that, as for the Christians, all there had been of them had already been killed. After this, the officers of the army attended and complained that the Mahomedans had raised the Mahomedan flag against them; but the King assured them that the object of its being erected was the slaughter of the English. The officers further represented that one of the magazine servants was seized at the bridge while in the act of taking away a small brass gun he had stolen from the park of artillery. The King sentenced the man to be blown away from a gun. Mirza Amin-ud-din Khan, Mirza Zia-ud-din Khan, Hasan Ali Khan, and Rahmat Ali Khan attended and paid their respects. The King bestowed a walking-stick on each of them as a mark of favour, and they severally presented five rupees each. Mirza Moghal received orders to proceed to Meerut, with four guns, four regiments of infantry, and the cavalry, in order to blow up the entrenchments there. The said Mirza suggested that Mirza Amin-ud-din Khan, Mirza Zia-ud-din Khan, Hasan Ali Khan, and other great chiefs holding extensive territories, might be sent with him, and promised to exterminate the English. On hearing this suggestion, the chiefs referred to remained silent. The King then directed Mirza Abulaskar to start with the force. Nawab Mahbub Ali Khan, and the physician Ahsan Ulla Khan, were ordered to provide funds for the expenses of the army during its march to Meerut. The infantry soldiers searched a cart coming from Meerut, and plundered some jewellery there was in it. Some troopers searched the Mubarak Bagh, situated beyond the cantonments, and killed two Europeans who had been hiding there. The officers of the army came and requested that the five European women who were prisoners might be made over to them. The King directed the doctor, Mahbub Ali, to present a legal opinion according to the Mahomedan law in this matter. The Moulavi presented the opinion required, ruling that the slaughter of women was not legal.

* Name omitted—Jawan Bakht was probably then appointed. legal according to the Mahomedan code. The King now retired to his private apartments, where he remained engaged in conference with the queen and the secretary Mukund Lal.

It being four o'clock, the Court adjourns till 11 a.m. to-morrow.

* "Jahadis"—those engaged in religious war.

7th August 1847.—It was reported that the army, having gone into the batteries, was now devotedly engaged in hostile operations. Near the close of the day the awe-inspiring intelligence was submitted that the magazine in the quarter called the Mohalla Jhariwalla had accidentally been fired, and that the men and women who had been employed there as labourers were burnt as if they had been roasted, and that the building was destroyed by the explosion. When the infantry soldiers, always ready to take advantage of any pretext for acts of oppression, heard of this matter, instigated by some ill-disposed characters, they immediately got up a false imputation against his Excellency the respected of the State (the court physician), of having had the place fired, and plundered and destroyed his house, and whatever came to each one's hand he carried off. Even the houses of the neighbours were plundered. The King was very much enraged on hearing this, and took the physician into his own protection, and further had a proclamation made, that all those who had any of the physician's property were to restore it immediately, otherwise their bellies would be ripped open. After this the King thought on God the avenger, and gave utterance to the following impromptu quatrain:—

My enemies assembled in force on all sides.
O All! all-powerful, for God's sake!
Thou hast sent an unseen army to my aid;
It is from thee I supplicate victory in my prayers.

The following paper, No. —, is now read in the original, and the translation of it is entered as follows:—

"With the approving sanction of God. The Lord of the nation."
"Exposition of a letter written regarding the victory of the faith."

All you rajahs are famed for your virtues, noble qualities, and liberality, and are moreover the protectors of your own faith and of the faith of others. Keeping your welfare in view, I humbly submit that God has given you your bodily existence to establish his different religions, and requires you severally to learn the tenets of your own different religious institutions, and you accordingly continue firm in them. God has moreover sent you into the world in your elevated position, and given you dominion and government that you may destroy those who harm your religion. It is incumbent, therefore, on each of you, as the power to kill those who may injure your religion, and on such as have not, to engage heartily in devising means for the same end, and thus protect your faith; for it is written in your Scriptures that martyrdom is preferable to adopting the religion of another. This is exactly what God has said, and what is evident to everybody. The English are people who overthrow all religions. You should understand well the object of destroying the religions of Hindustan; they have for a long time been causing books to be written and circulated throughout the country by the hands of their priests, and, exercising their authority, have brought out numbers of preachers to spread their own tenets: this has been learned from one of their own trusted agents. Consider, then, what systematic contrivances they have adopted to destroy our religions. For instance, first, when a woman became a widow they ordered her to make a second marriage. Secondly, the self-immolation of wives on the funeral pyres of their deceased husbands was an ancient religious custom; the English had it discontinued, and enacted their own regulations prohibiting it. Thirdly, they told people it was their wish that they (the people) should adopt their faith, promising that if they did so they would be respected by Government; and further required them to attend churches, and hear the tenets preached there. Moreover, they decided and told the rajahs that such only as were born of their wives would inherit the government and property, and that adopted heirs would not be allowed to succeed, although, according to your Scriptures, ten different sorts of heirs are allowed shares in the inheritance. By this contrivance they will rob you of your governments and possessions, as they have already done with Nagpur and Lucknow. Consider now another of their designing plans: they resolved on compelling prisoners, with the forcible exercise of their authority, to eat their bread. Numbers died of starvation, but did not eat it; others eat it, and sacrificed their faith. They now perceived that this expedient did not succeed well, and accordingly determined on having bones ground and mixed with flour and sugar, so that people might unsuspectingly eat them in this way. They had, moreover, bone and flesh broken small and mixed with rice, which they caused to be placed in the markets for sale, and tried, besides, every other possible plan to destroy our religions. At last some Bengali, after due reflection, said that if the troops would accede to the wishes of the English in this matter, all the Bengalis would also conform to them. The English, hearing this, approved of it, and said, "Certainly this is an excellent idea," never imagining they would be themselves exterminated. They accordingly now ordered the Brahmins and others of their army to bite cartridges, in the making up of which fat had been used. The Mussulman soldiers perceived that by this expedient the religion of the Brahmans and Hindus only was in danger, but nevertheless they also refused to bite them. On this the English now resolved on ruining the faith of both, and blew away from guns all those soldiers who persisted in their refusal. Seeing this excessive tyranny, the soldiery now, in self-preservation, began killing the English, and slew them wherever they were found, and are now considering means for sparing the few still alive here and there. It is now my firm conviction that if these English continue in Hindustan they will kill every one in the country, and will utterly overthrow our religions; but there are some of my countrymen who have joined the English, and are now fighting on their side. I have reflected well on their case also, and have come to the conclusion that the English will not leave your religion to both you and them. You should understand this well. Under these circumstances, I would ask, what course have you decided on to protect your lives and faith? Were your views and mine the same, we might destroy them entirely with a very little trouble; to do that, we shall protect our religions and save the country. As these ideas have been cherished and considered merely from a concern for the protection of the religions and lives of all you Hindus and Musalmans of this country, this letter is printed for your information. All you Hindus are hereby solemnly adjured, by your faith in the Ganges, Tulas, and Satigram; and all you Musalmans, by your belief in God and the Koran, as these English are the common enemy of both, to unite in considering their salvation, for by this alone will the lives and faith of both be saved. It is expedient, then, that you should ceaseless and slay them. The slaughter of kine is regarded by the Hindus as a great insult to their religion. To prevent this, a solemn compact and agreement has been entered into by all the Mahomedan chiefs of Hindustan, binding themselves, that if the Hindus will come forward to slay the English, the Mahome- dans will from that very day put a stop to the slaughter of cows, and those of them who will not do so will be considered to have abjured the Koran, and such of them as will eat beef will be regarded as though they had eaten pork; but if the Hindus will not gird their loins to kill the English, but will try to save them, they will be as guilty in the sight of God as though they had committed the sins of killing cows and eating flesh. Perhaps the English may, for their own ends, try to assure the Hindus that as the Musalmans have consented to give up killing cows from respect for the Hindu religion, they will solemnly engage to do the same to the Hindus; but a Mahomedan man will be gulled by such deceit, for the solemn promises and professions of the English are always deceitful and interested. Once their ends are gained they will infringe their engagements, for deception has ever been habitual with them, and the treachery they have always practised on the people of Hindustan is known to rich and poor. Do not, therefore, give heed to what they may say. Be well assured you will never have such an opportunity again. We all know that writing a letter is equivalent to an advance half way towards fellowship. I trust you will all write answers approving of what has been proposed herein. This letter has been printed under the direction of Moulay Syad Kurb Shah Sahib, at the Bahadur press, in the city of Bareilly.

The following extracts from a native paper called the "Suraj ul Akhbar," are now read in the original. Translations of them are entered as follows:

Tuesday, 28th August 1857.—The time between dawn and daylight having been passed in the usual necessary religious observances, the respected of the State (the physician) was allowed the honour of inspecting the royal palace. The King then took his seat on the throne in state, and the great and dignified nobles of the realm, being allowed the honour of appearing in the royal presence, discharged with extreme respect their devoirs and obeisances. His Majesty inspected two orders prepared in the royal secretariat office, the one addressed to Bahadur Ali Khan, Hassain Ali Khan, Durga Prasad, and Bulp Singh, officers of the troops at Feshawar, directing them to make all haste in coming to the royal presence, and to take the whole amount of treasure with them, and the other to the grand royal, Mirza Muhammad Kuhak, ordering him to distribute the pay of the Naseerud' force. After inspection, these orders were sealed with the special seal, and despatched agreeable to the royal permission. His Majesty then proceeded to bestow consideration on the following petitions.—First. A petition from Tanwar Ali Khan, son of Muhammad Abdul Ghafar Khan, resident of Mustafabad, otherwise called Ramapur, professing fidelity and avowing his intention of coming to the royal presence. Second petition from Rajah Nhab Singh, Chief of Balabghar, through Mir Fateh Ali Khan, making professions of heartfelt fidelity, allegiance, zeal, and good-will. Thirdly. A petition from Waris Muhammad Khan of Bupal, reporting the slaughter of 50 of the accursed English, and enclosing copy of a proclamation issued to the residents of the city and country, to engage in like manner in the destruction of the damnable infidels, and moreover soliciting the honour of a royal missive. Fourthly. A petition from Kashi Rajo Holkar, of Indore, expressive of his devotion and zealous activity in the service of the King; avowing his fixed purpose and determinate resolve to ruin and exterminate the English, clever in all villainy; and forwarding five of the heads of enemies killed. Fifthly. A petition from Muhammad Amir Khan, son of Ghulam Muhammad Khan, son of Abdul Samad Khan, resident of Dojana.

Having perused the above petitions, his Majesty decided that answers should be sent, after further consideration.

The officers of the army, coming into the royal presence, submitted that as Muhammad Bakht Khan, Governor-general Bahadur, had gone with his Majesty's victorious forces in the direction of Allahpur, to fight against the infidel enemy, and was now engaged in active operations against them, it was necessary that reinforcements should be sent to his assistance. On this representation, orders were accordingly issued that a further portion of the troops should be sent in that direction.

After this his Majesty retired to his private kingly hall; at noon he partook of the delicacies presented for dinner, after which he enjoyed a siesta. He then went through the prayers appointed for the first of the daily five times, continued occupied in such matters as those he delights in, and then read the prayers of the second time. Near the close of the day he honoured the respected of the State (the court physician) by allowing him to feel feel his pulse; after this he descended to visit the luxuriant garden of Salimgarh for relaxation and pleasure. Returning from Salimgarh, his Majesty retired to his private hall. The officers of the force stationed at Teliwara represented the irregularity of no force being sent to relieve them. After this he again came into the hall of special audience, and held a levee, but retired again shortly, much agitated and displeased. After sunset those in attendance at court were honoured with permission to leave.

Wednesday, 26th August 1857.—Having passed the time between dawn and sunrise in the observances suited to that portion of the day, his Majesty allowed the respected of the State (the court physician) to feel his pulse, and then took his seat in state on the throne, the exalted nobles in attendance forming a circle like a halo round the moon. The officers of the army submitted that reinforcements should be sent to the aid of the forces which had gone out to combat with the enemy, and were now engaged in this laudable service. Orders were accordingly issued, that the whole army, infantry and cavalry, were to go. After this, the King having inspected the three following orders prepared in the royal secretariat office, they were attested with the seal, and the King gave permission for their being despatched:

1. An order to the officers of the army, directing that the one-half of the forces should proceed to the Najafgarh battery, and the other to the Teliwara battery.

2. An order to Mirza Muhammad Zohur-ud-din Bahadur, regarding his investment with power to forgive offences, and to consider the army under his orders.

3. An order to Thakur Chaman Singh, to bring some more of his brothers.

A petition having been received from Shahzada Muhammad Azim Bahadur, representing his difficulties in consequence of the arrival of the enemies' forces, and requesting that reinforcements, including artillery, might be sent to his assistance, the king gave orders that a royal missive in reply should be written. After this, the King retired from the court to his private apartments; at noon his Majesty partook of his delicacies presented for dinner, and then retired to take his siesta. Having gone through the prayers of the first of the five times, he occupied himself with such amusements as he is partial to, and then read the prayers of the second time. Near the close of the day, his Majesty, accompanied by all the nobles of the State, went to the Salimgarh garden for recreation and amusement. He returned in the evening, and retired to his private apartments.

Thursday, 27th August 1857.—Rising at dawn, and passing some time in the customary religious observances, the King honoured the respected of the State (the court physician) by allowing him to feel his pulse. His Majesty then took his seat in state on the throne, when his illustrious sons, and the exalted nobles of the realm, paid their respects. Baldoo Singh Kundla Kush presented his nazr, when, with excessive kindness, he was honoured with the gift of a pair of shawls, as treasurer of the infantry, and he accordingly presented the usual nazr to show his thankfulness for this honour, which was accepted. The King next examined the six following orders, which had been prepared in the royal secretariat office, and, after inspection, permitted their being attested with the special seal and despatched:

1. An order to Mirza Mahammad Khair Sultan Bahadur, assuring him that he was invested with full powers in regard to arrangements for raising money, and that no representations in this matter from any person whatsoever would be heeded.

2. An order to Mirza Moghal Bahadur, Mirza Khair Sultan Bahadur, the officers of the army, and the members of the court of deliberation, to the effect that money having been twice received from the merchant Ramji Das Gurwals, he was on no account to be subjected to any further demand.

3. An order to Mirza Abdul Hasan, otherwise Mirza Abdullah Bahadur, in answer to the petition of Amir Khan of Dojana, directing his attendance at court.

4. An order to Kashi Rao Holkar of Indore, directing his attendance at court.

5. An order to Raja Nahar Singh, Chief of Ballabgarh, intimating that a dun horse had been received, and directing him to entertain no fears of being molested by the army.

6. An order through Fat-h Ali Khan to Tanawar Ali Khan, son of Abdulla Khan of Rampur, directing his attendance. Some troopers communicated particulars of the success, valor, and enterprise of the troops, and particularly of the Neemuch force; they also communicated the gathering of the peasantry round Najafgarh. Feeling indisposed, his Majesty issued orders for the immediate attendance of the court physician, and retired to his private apartments. At noon, his Majesty sat of the delicacies presented for his dinner, and then took his siesta; after this he discharged the prayers of the second of the five daily times, continued engaged in the recreations he is partial to, and then read the prayers appointed for the third time of the day. The court physician, being in attendance, prepared and gave his Majesty a cooling draught. Near the close of the day all who had been in attendance at court were allowed to leave.

Friday, 28th August 1857.—Having discharged the usual religious observances, the King permitted the court physician to feel his pulse, and then came into the hall of special audience, where the nobles and chiefs of the realm paid their respects. Khwaja Isma'il Khan, a resident of Culpi, came forward and presented the offering of the disk on admission to the royal presence. His Majesty, feeling weak, then retired to his private apartments. At noon he enjoyed his dinner, then took his siesta; afterwards he discharged the prayers appointed for the second and third times of the day, drank a cooling draught prepared by the court physician, and dismissed his retinue for the day.
The four following orders were then attested with the special seal, and issued agreeably to his Majesty's commands.

1. An order to Muhammad Safi, brigadier, &c., in answer to his petition, assuring him that his Majesty was not displeased or angry with him, nor did he entertain any suspicions against the Neemuch troops.

2. An order to Mirza Rahmat Bahadur to pay up the rent of the Imambara, which is appropriated to the expenses of the department called the "Nazar Nisar."

3. An order to Ahmad Ali Khan, Chief of Farrukh-nagar, directing him to send some matchlocks.

4. An order to Bahadur Jung, regarding the theft in his territory of a string of 14 camels.

A petition from Abdul Latif Khan, Chief of Khanpur, promising to come to court, and to bring some elephants with him, and representing that he had been unwell.

At one o'clock the court adjourns till Saturday the 27th of February, at 11 a.m., that Mr. Everett, a witness, may attend.

EIGHTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Saturday, 27 February 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at 11 a.m. in the hall of special audience in the palace of Delhi.

The President, Members, Interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-General are all present.

The prisoner is brought into Court, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas.

John Everett, a Risaldar, late of the 14th Regiment of Irregular Cavalry, and now of the Constabulary Force, is called into Court and duly sworn.

Examined by Judge-Advocate.

Question.—Were you at Delhi on the 11th of May 1857?
Answer.—I was.

Question.—Relate what you then witnessed in reference to the outbreak?
Answer.—About nine o'clock in the morning the mutineers from Meerut entered the city, and the alarm was given that they were killing the European gentlemen and all the Christians. Half an hour afterwards I heard the report of musketry near the magazine. I remained quiet in the house till evening, being unwell, and only at Delhi on sick leave; but not thinking myself safe in the bured house in which I was living, I went, about dark, into Colonel Skinner's compound and remained there all night. Very early next morning I went to Mirza Azim Beg's house (a sirdar bahadur and a pensioner from the 1st Irregular Cavalry), and asked him to keep me in his house during the day, and at any rate to get me out of the city. He told me to remain quiet in his house, and that he would try and do so. I remained there for a day and a night, and the second day he told me that his neighbours had got intelligence of my being hid in his house. Mr. George Skinner was also in his house. Mirza Azim Beg, with whom we were staying, went to the palace for the purpose of getting a guard from the King for our protection. He was away an hour on his errand, and then sent me word that the King's physician, viz., Ahsan Ullah Khan, was very angry at his protecting Christians in his house (Ahsan Ullah Khan was a relative of Mirza Azim Beg), and desired that we were to get out of his house immediately. I accordingly left his house as he desired, but Mr. George Skinner remained concealed in the apartments of the females of the establishment. I had got away about 200 yards from the sirdar bahadur's house, when I saw some of the mutineer sepoys. A masjid was close to me, and I thought if I could get into it and remain quiet, the mutineers would pass on; but just as the mutineers came in line with the masjid, some one recognised me and called out to the mutineers that there was a Christian in the masjid. They accordingly made me a prisoner; they then went to the house of Mirza Azim Beg, and also made a prisoner of Mr. George Skinner. Both of us were being taken to the kotwal; but before we had reached it, about 11 troopers from the 3rd Light Cavalry came galloping up and asked the sepoys, "Who are you taking prisoners? Are they Christians?" They replied "Yes," when some of the troopers drew their pistols, and said, "Why take them to the kotwal at all; why not kill them here?" The others replied, "The kotwal is not far off, let them go there, and you can then do as you like." On reaching the kotwal the sepoys made a report to the kotwal, saying they had brought two civilians, prisoners. The kotwal gave no answer, and a trooper came up to Mr. George Skinner and caught him by the hair of his head, and pulling him away about 50 paces from the kotwal, and placing him in front of the canal wall, shot him with his pistol; several other shots were fired at him by some other troopers, and he fell dead. I stood before the kotwal thinking they would come and take me; but the troopers, after killing Mr. Skinner, galloped off to the fort. I was then ordered by the havidar at the kotwal, to go and sit among the prisoners; and there I remained for 23 days with 40 others, men, women, and children, all Christians; after which we were released in consequence of a maulavy, by the name of Muhammad Isma'il, giving evidence that we were all Mahomedans.
dans, and that if there were any Christians they would become Mahomedans, and that it was not lawful to kill such as turn to Mahomedanism of their own accord. We were not, however, allowed to leave the city. I then went to live with an African of the name of Monjud.

Question.—Had you had any intercourse or intimacy with this man previously?

Answer.—I knew the man very well, as he had been in Colonel Skinner's service formerly, and had left it about the year 1842.

Question.—At the time of the outbreak, in whose service was this African?

Answer.—In the King's service; he had been so many years.

Question.—Did he ever try and induce you to leave the Company's service, and go over to that of the King?

Answer.—Yes, he did speak to me about it, viz., about three days previous to the outbreak; he came to my house while I was looking at horses to purchase for my corps, and said he wished to speak to me. I went aside with him, and he then said, "You had better leave the Company's service, and with your troop come over to that of the King." He said this in the way of friendly advice. I asked him his reason. He said, "This hot weather you will see the Russians all over the place." I laughed at the fellow's ideas, and told him to go away just then, as I was busy, and I would see him some other time. This conversation took place on Saturday, the 9th of May 1857, at 11 a.m. He did not come back, however, and when I was released from the kotwal I went to him, and he said to me, "Did I not tell you to come away?" And he then went on to tell me that there was an African, of the name of Kambar, that had been sent from here, two years before the outbreak, to Constantinople; he also mentioned that this man Kambar had left Delhi on the pretence of going to Mecca, but had really been sent as an ambassador from the King of Delhi, to get some help from Russia; and that this man Kambar, on leaving Delhi, had made a promise that he would return in two years.

Question.—During your stay with Monjud, did you get any further intelligence from him relative to the outbreak?

Answer.—No, not exactly in reference to the outbreak; but he used to return home at night, and give me the news of the day; and on one occasion he told me that the King had assembled all his sons and his men of note at a public durbar, and remarked to them that since the battle at Ghazi-ud-din-nagar, he had observed that they had been gradually sneaking away from their attendance on him, and that he imagined this must be through a fright. The King added, that this was the time when they should all unite, and heartily combine to drive the British off the ridge. "If you do not do so," said he, "mark my words: if the British ever enter Delhi again, they will not leave one soul alive of the descendants of Taimur Shah." This man Monjud was the chief of 10 or 12 Africans in the service of the King; he was a private special attendant of his, and was always by his side, and I think his statements to me may be perfectly relied on.

Question.—Did this man Monjud offer you money or any other inducements to quit the Company's service?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Do you know whether his proposal to the above effect emanated from the King or any high official in the palace?

Answer.—I did not take it as such; I merely thought it the man's foolhardiness.

Question.—Are you aware whether any other persons in the military service of the Company were ever solicited to go over to the King?

Answer.—Not to my knowledge.

Question.—Did you ever hear the men of your regiment talking about the chapatis that were circulated from village to village before the outbreak?

Answer.—No; I was on leave at my own village at the time, and all that I heard in reference to the subject was, that the chapatis were going about, and that nobody could make out the meaning of it.

Question.—How long had you been in Delhi previous to the 11th of May?

Answer.—About 13 or 14 days.

Question.—During that time, had you heard the people saying and speaking among themselves to the effect that any disturbance was soon likely to occur?

Answer.—No, I was sick, and had little intercourse with the Delhi people.

Question.—You have said that Monjud told you, after the outbreak, that the Russians would soon be all over the place; do you know whether this was the general belief of the people of the city?

Answer.—Yes, I think it was; the subject was one of general conversation among the Mahomedans with whom I was able to have intercourse; they said they expected the Russians this hot season.

Question.—Had you, previous to the outbreak, any conversation with the native officers and men of your regiment, on the subject of the Company's Government?

Answer.—A Mahomedan officer of the 14th Irregular Cavalry, by the name of Mirza Tuki Beg, said it was written in his books that a change would take place, and that the British rule would soon be overthrown. This was at Peshawur. I am not sure whether it was in the year 1855 or 1856.

Question.—Have you ever heard any persons remarking on the length of time the English rule had lasted, and that in the common order of events it could not exist much longer?

Answer.—No.
Question.—From what you know, were the Hindus in Delhi, or the Mussalmans most averse to the Company's Government?

Answer.—The Mussalmans.

Question.—Did you ever hear that the King of Persia was coming with an army to India; or did you ever hear the war between the English and Persians particularly alluded to by the natives?

Answer.—No, I never used to talk with the natives on this subject, as I got my information from reading the English newspapers.

Question.—Do you know whether the expected coming of the Russians was believed in by the natives or talked about by them before the outbreak?

Answer.—No, I cannot speak to the point, as I never had any intercourse with the natives.

The prisoner declines to cross-examine.

Examined by Court.

Question.—From anything you heard whilst in Delhi, have you the least reason to suppose that the prisoner joined the mutinous army unwillingly?

Answer.—I can only declare what I have heard; that at the first commencement the King was unwilling; but when he found himself implicated, he joined afterwards, viz., in about a fortnight. This is mere hearsay, and I can produce no authority for it.

The witness withdraws.

Ghulam Abbas, the prisoner's attorney, is reminded of his affirmation as a witness.

Examined by Judge Advocate.

Question.—Look at these 12 papers, and say whether you think them genuine or not?

Answer.—Those which have the orders in pencil at the top are certainly genuine, for the pencil orders are in the hand-writing of the prisoner. I have no reason to suppose that the other papers are not genuine; those which have the cypher in pencil are also genuine, as the cypher is in the King's writing. These papers are now read by the interpreter in original, and the translation of them is read and entered as follows.

PETITION of Muhammad Murtaza Khan, Risaldar; no Date. Date of a Note on the Reverse, 9th July 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World, &c.

Respectfully showeth,—That agreeably to your royal orders your petitioner and the men of the corps of cavalry have for a month and a half had their quarters in your Majesty’s garden, generally known as that of Begam Sombre, and that, having had the bath-room under the house cleared of the accumulated filth and rubbish, at an expense of one rupee from their own funds, they have kept the cavalry appurtenances and accoutrements there. The men of the regular cavalry, now come from Gwalior, have taken possession of the place, and the troopers of my corps are in consequence suffering great inconvenience from exposure to the rain, for besides this bath-room there is no other place of shelter in the garden in question. I therefore pray that orders may be issued to the men of the regular cavalry, directing them not to disturb us in our occupancy, but to search out some other quarters for themselves, or at least to occupy one-half themselves and to leave the other half to us. It was necessary, and I have therefore submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Mir Muhammad Murtaza Khan, Risaldar.

PETITION of Muhammad Kheja Hasan Khan, deputed to Saharanpur, &c., written from Muradnagar; dated 9 September 1857.

To the King! Cherisher of the Poor, Lord of Mankind, &c.

Respectfully showeth,—That your petitioner has before this, both by petition and verbal messages, sent intelligence daily of the reported coming of the Europeans with six guns, for the purpose of desolating Muradnagar and Gazilabad, and destroying the bridge over the Hindun, Hindan, and requesting to be favoured with reinforcements, that he might make a slaughter of the infidels. Your Majesty has not yet been pleased to bestow any aid. Information has just been obtained from travellers coming from Meerut, that the Europeans, accompanied by Ali Khan, the former subordinate collector of revenue in the service of the infidels, and bringing four guns, have left Meerut on their march in the direction of Muradnagar, with the object of attacking your petitioner and destroying the said bridge. Before this, some Europeans went with six guns from Haprar and burnt the village of Pilkhoah, killing nearly 160 of its inhabitants. This force also intends moving in this direction. In consequence of this intelligence, your petitioner has taken up a position on the road with the whole force of cavalry and infantry, the men being kept under arms. Your petitioner has no reluctance to sacrifice his life in your Majesty’s cause, but reflecting on the numerical weakness of his party, and the absence of artillery, he is, to some extent, afraid that the bridge may be broken. Should the bridge be in any way injured (God forbid that it should be!) the movements of the troops and the conveyance of supplies will be entirely hindered.
Your petitioner trusts that any reinforcement in infantry and artillery may be speedily despatched by your Majesty, so that the infidels may be effectually resisted. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the slave Muhammad Khwaja Khan, deputed to Saharanpur, &c. written from Muradnagar, under date the 9th September 1857.

Autograph Order by the King, in Pencil.

Mirza Moghal will act in accordance with the requisition in the petition.

Order on the reverse: (probably by Mirza Moghal in furtherance of the King’s order).—
The Brigade Major Sahib is directed to take such measures as may be necessary.

Order, also on the reverse, by the brigade major apparently.—Let an order be written, directing the 14th Regiment of infantry to go out. Dated 10th September 1857 ; year of reign, 21.

To the King! Shelter of the World, &c. &c.

Respectfully showeth,—That your slave, the petitioner, has been in attendance since yesterday, but has not a place so much as to sit or stand in. I therefore pray that some quarters may be assigned to me and my companions, in all 84 jahadis, where we may rest ourselves. It was necessary, and we have submitted it. Petition of the slave Syad Muhammad Hasan Jahadi, and well-wisher to his Majesty’s cause.

Local Intelligence.—Persia.—It is ascertained from newspapers from Persia that the Persian King has issued orders to all his troops, not absolutely employed in the different districts, to assemble and remain at Teheran till further orders, which they have been told they will be expected to carry out with heart and soul immediately on receipt. It is currently reported here that this demonstration against the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan is only a strategic move on the part of the King of Persia to cloak his real design of fighting against and conquering the English, because, confiding in the British power, Amir Dost Muhammad Khan has allied himself to the English, and been the cause of all the disagreements between the English and the Persians. The King of Persia, however, has not openly thrown off amicable relations with the English, nor has he yet personally adopted a course of enmity against Amir Dost Muhammad Khan. It is nevertheless certain some change of feeling has taken place amongst the three Powers.

Local News.—France.—The newspapers all agree in declaring that the King of France and the Emperor of Turkey have not as yet openly avowed themselves the allies of either the English or the Persians; but the ambassadors of these two opposite parties secretly visit the courts of both the sovereigns above-mentioned, with gifts and presents. Some think that the King of France and the Emperor of Turkey will not mix themselves in the quarrel between the Persians and the English; but most people say, that they will both side with the Persians. Whatever is ascertained hereafter will be published without fail. As for the Russians, however, they make no secret of the readiness with which they are assisting, and will continue to assist the Persians, whether it be with funds or with forces. It may be said that virtually the Russians are the cause of this war, and that using the Persians as a cloak, they intend to consummate their own designs regarding the conquest of Hindustan. It is to be believed that the Russians will very soon take the field in great force. If anything further is ascertained, it will be published. Let the readers of the "Authentic News" be prepared to see what the veil of futurity will disclose.

No. 3.

Local News.—Court of Persia.—It is discovered from late Bombay papers received at this press, that the King of Persia one day summoned a number of Herat chiefs, together with his nobles, to his Court, and had a conference with them regarding the war. After due deliberation, they all advised him unanimously to declare war against the English, expressing their dependence that God would will his being victorious, for, said they, "Taking Herat, you will be in a position as though you had reached the doorway into Hindustan." They further urged that the wish of the Russians, too, was that the Persians should go to war with the English, and should conquer India. On this the King declared, with an oath, that he was greatly pleased with these courtiers, who had given advice so opposite to that of his pernicious Prime Minister, and solemnly promised that on reaching India, he would appoint them to the Governorships of different provinces, viz., one to that of Bombay, another to that of Calcutta, a third to Poona, and so on; and that he would bestow the crown on the King of Delhi. Just at this juncture, intelligence was brought that the Prime Minister had clandestinely sold the King's diadem, jewelled with precious stones, through a merchant named Haji Ali, for a lakh and twenty-five thousand francs, giving him (the merchant) a portion of the money. On this, the King sent for the wily Prime Minister, and questioned him on the subject, but he denied all knowledge of the business. The King then had the merchant apprehended and fined, and expressed his displeasure in no measured terms with the Prime Minister for keeping up intrigues with people of other nations. It is reported that the duties of Prime Minister have been entrusted to some other statesman. It is said that the Prime Minister above alluded to generally counseled seded the king to maintain a peaceable policy. It was reported to the king that the Emperor of Russia had sent an effective and thoroughly appointed army of 400,000 men, with abundant munition, to assist him, and that portions of these had already joined the Persians; and it was also reported that the Emperor of Russia had declared that if the force should be insufficient for the intended wars and slaughter, the constabulary army would also be sent. In answer to these communications, the king spoke in terms of the highest praise of the Emperor Alexander of Russia, and issued instructions that funds for the expenses of the Russian army should be deferred from his treasury, and that the courier from the Russian army should not want for anything, or suffer any inconveniences.

After this, the French ambassador submitted, as welcome news, that his sovereign, who had for some days been unwell, was now, by the blessing of God, restored to perfect health. The king, hearing this, said he thanked God for it. The Georgian ambassador now presented his master's compliments, and stated that according to the laws of England and Turkey, the sale of slaves of both sexes still continued in his country. Throughout Persia it is reported that the chief reason for the Persian king going to war with the English is, that for five successive generations, the occupants of the Persian throne, intending to conquer India, had been accumulating all sorts of military munitions, and had been laying by treasures; but that no one of them had been able to work up his resolution to the undertaking, and that, moreover, Nasi-ud-din, the present sovereign, had himself long cherished the same wish, transmitted to him as it were hereditarily, when the present opportunity presented itself. On one side, Herat came easily into possession; on another, the unforeseen assistance of the Russians came to his aid; on a third, the nobles unanimously counselled an advance on India, predicting that God would bestow victory; and on a fourth, the whole nation rose and assembled as for a religious war, so that the King of Persia had no alternative but a declaration of war. It is also said that the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, the ruler of Cabul, is secretly in league with the King of Persia, while he professes to the English that he is at deadly enmity with him, urging as his reason that the sovereignty of Cabul had formerly always descended in lines of Shah Kamran and Shuja-ul-mulk, and that the King of Persia had appointed the Prince Yusef his vice-gerent in the government of Herat; that this prince now counsels the King of Persia to take the sovereignty of Cabul from the Amir, and to borrow it on him, as it is in consequence of this that the Persians are advancing towards Cabul, and that he seriously apprehends that Prince Yusef, assisted by the Persians, will finally take Cabul from the Afghans, in requital for Shah Shujah-ul-mulk's dispossession. On leaving for Cabul, the Amir wrote a letter to the King of Persia, that he was altogether a subject of the Persian sovereignty, and that he had no relations with the British Government.

Proclamation of the King of Persia.

Copies of a proclamation in the name of the King of Persia have been put up at the entrances to the streets and lanes of Delhi. One of my friends took an exact transcript of the copy which had been put up on the back of the Jama Masjid. This proclamation was seen by most people. The purport of it, in a condensed form, is, that people professing the true faith should, as a matter of duty, eschew assisting the Christians, and should, as being right and proper, exhort themselves to the full extent of their ability to promote the welfare of the Mussalmans; that the time is at hand when, God willing, we, the King of Persia, will sit on the throne of India, and will make the king and people of that country contented and happy. In the same measure as the English have done everything to make them desist from even the means of subsistence, we will exert ourselves to make them rich and affluent. We use no interference with any man's religion. Such is the substance of the proclamation. Moreover, a person of the name of Muhammad Sadik Khan, by means of whom this proclamation has been made public, writes, that up to the 6th instant, 900 Persian soldiers, with some officers of high rank, had entered India, and 500 are staying in Delhi itself in various disguises; and, as an instance, he mentions himself particularly as having reached Delhi on the 4th March, and circulated all the copies of the proclamation. He says, that he receives intelligence from all parts of the country, that he sends accounts regularly of everything occurring here to the King of Persia, that he will communicate to all, by means of proclamations, every intelligence regarding the despatch and advance of the Persian troops, and whatever else may be worth making known.

People say, that this proclamation has been contrived merely to get up idle speculations, and being of the same opinion, I too would ask, what is the object of Muhammad Sadik Khan's coming to Delhi? If his object is war, his coming in this way with such purpose is absolute absurdity. If he has come as a spy, then his publishing his presence by a proclamation is a baseless inconsistency, and the expenses of his mission a useless waste of money. Putting gain out of the calculation altogether, damage to his object is the likely result of such a course. Setting all this aside, however, it may be asked, what cause for rejoicing would the Hindus have were the King of Persia to exercise sway over India? From the proclamation, it appears that he intends himself to occupy the throne of India. The Hindus would only then have cause to be pleased if the King of Persia, acting like Abbas Shah Saif, should enthrone our own king; and where would be the wonder if he did so, for it was Taimur himself who bestowed sovereignty on the Persians, and it was reflecting on this that induced the said Abbas Shah to assist Humayan.

PROCLAMATION in the Name of the King of Persia.

Lately some designing and mischievous promoter of sedition of Delhi, imagining notoriety would be fame, placarded a proclamation purporting to be from the King of Persia, on the back of the Jama Masjid, with the purpose of misleading the populace. The substance of this proclamation was, that the Mussulmans and Hindus should both refrain from helping the Christians, and that the King of Persia will shortly conquer Hindustan, and bestowing rewards and favours will keep the people in peace and happiness. The man who circulated this proclamation has written his name as Muhammad Sadik Khan. It is said that the authorities at Delhi were very much annoyed by this absurd falsehood. I feel convinced, that if any one will apprehend this misguided liar, he will get some pecuniary reward; but God knows whether he will or not. However, as for our good friend Mr. Muhammad Sadik Khan, the forger, who issued this proclamation, we feel sure that if he falls into the hands of Government, a double-soled shoe steeped in vinegar will be caused to make a precious good clatter on his scabby cranium, and his hair pretty well dishevelled. This fine gentleman with the alias will then learn, that a house of bricks may be turned into dust, and bow aptitude for such frolics may be expelled through the nose, much in the same way as a cold in the head finds vent, and after what fashion our fine fellows of this stamp may have the breath taken out of them.

Local News.—Cabul.—A correspondent of the "Delhi Gazette," writing from Cabul under date the 29th March, says: That the small force ordered by the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan to punish the people of Pesb Dolek and Surja Khan had returned to Jalalabad, after, as it appears, an engagement with Muhammad Shah Khan, in which nearly thirty of them were killed, and about the same number wounded. Although the Amir's soldiers took a great quantity of Muhammad Shah Khan's baggage, the Khan, to save his life, escaped to the fortress in the country about L망ghan. The brother of Mirzad Khan had just arrived from Jalalabad, and informed the correspondent that the said Amir had marched to the direction of Tuteh, but it was not known then whether he would celebrate the festival of the new year's day at Ballahagh or at Cabul. The brother of Mirzad Khan also mentioned that some English newspapers published in India were read to the Amir, in which the mismanagement of Government was canvassed in advancing money to the Amir, who, the papers said, was keeping up relations on both sides, and that on hearing this the Amir remarked, that when the English get into any difficulty they expended millions of pounds sterling, and that now when the Persians, instigated by the Russians, were planning the invasion of Afghanistan, with the ulterior design of disturbing the government of India, the Governor-General had, with wisdom and judgment, considered his, the Amir's, alliance worth having. The correspondent adds, that it is much discussed at Cabul that in consequence of the instigation and mischievous designs of Sultan Muhammad Khan, Imam Haji is exciting the inhabitants of the hill country, and that it is also currently reported that Sultan Jan has, with treachery and supplication, applied to the Persian commander-in-chief at Herat for permission to invade Girishk, affirming that the people of Girishk have agreed to assist him on the condition that the taxes he remitted for three years.

EXTRACT from the Newspaper in the Urdu Tongue, styled "Compendium of News."

Local News.—Persia.—Some days ago a proclamation was found placarded on a wall of the Jama Masjid. A sword and shield were depicted on it, and the following, as coming from the Shah of Persia, was the substance of the paper, viz.:—That it was a religious obligation on all true believing Muhammadans to guild their loins resolutely to assist the King of Persia, and to be faithfully subject and obedient to his authority, and to fight and contend against the English, so that vanquishing and routing them in battle, they may receive and enjoy the favours, rewards, and titles which the King of Persia will lavishily bestow on them. The proclamation also stated that the Persian king, or second Jan, would very soon come to India and annex this country as a dependency, and that great multitudes of people had already assembled, and were constantly repeating the following couplet, as if from some involuntary and irresistible impulse:—"Oh God, save the very dust of Persia from the winds of misfortune, so long as even dust and wind may exist." The newswriter states that the above is a translation from the Persian, but that it has not yet come to pass. Several petitions without names have been given into the Magistrate's Court on the same subject, and in these it was also mentioned that a month hence from this date an overwhelming attack attack will be made on Cashmire, of the salubrity and beauty of which place a poet has said—

That should a parched and burnt up soul reach Cashmire.
Though he might be a roasted fowl,
He would recover his wings and feathers, and that this cool and heavenly country will come into the possession of the writers of the petitions. The writer of this paper considers all this as mere senseless and absurd jesting and levity, for if countries are liable thus to slip out of the hands of governments, what is the use of armies?

EXTRACT from the Newspaper in the Urdu Tongue called the “Authentic News,” Proclamation of the King of Persia regarding the Conquest of India.

The editor of the English newspaper called the Punjabi, in his issue No. XI., writes that on the capture of Mohunna, his correspondent found the translation of a proclamation in one of the prince’s tents, the substance of which he communicated to the editor by electric telegraph, and which he now publishes for the perusal of his readers. The following is the purport of the proclamation:

“Let it be known that the English Government first planted their victorious standard in India, and step by step subjugated all the powerful princes of the Eastern provinces. Some short time ago they conquered Afghanistan, but relinquished it in consequence of what they suffered from the restless turbulence of the Afghans. After this they took possession of the cities of Lahore and Peshawur, and of other free and independent countries. They now wish to come through Afghanistan and establish their sway in Persia also, and it is with this object that they are making friends of our neighbours and co-religionists, the Afghans, so that they may allow them to pass, and that they may then desolate and plunder Persia and cause confusion among the professors of the true faith. Moreover, it has been heard that an English force, intended for the invasion of Persia by land, has already marched, and the English forces have taken a small maritime fort belonging to the Mahomedans, and have for its security placed a garrison in it, but the English do not allow their forces to advance, knowing that if they do so they will feel the temper and sharp edge of the Mahomedan swords, and would soon be on the ground struggling in the agonies of death like fish out of water. Shah Nasir-ud-din, King of Persia, therefore has the greatest pleasure in making the following proclamation:

“Proclamation.—Let all the troops assemble at the different places on the frontiers of Persia to resist these enemies professing an antagonistic faith. It behoves the Arab tribes to act up to the precepts of the prophet (blessed for ever be he and his offspring). Shy all those who have caused you affliction in the same way that they intended to afflict you. It is now necessary that old and young, high and low, wise and foolish, peasant and soldier, should all without hesitation rise to the assistance of their co-religionists, assume arms, raise the Mahomedan standard, and inform the members of their tribes of the declaration in the name of God, of a religious war of extermination, for God will bestow the fruition of their hopes on those defenders of the faith who will thus exert themselves, and we too will be much pleased with them. I have sent to various noble and chieftains, Mirza Jan Koshaki, Sabahi, the champion of the nation, the chief Mir Ali Khan, and other generals, officers, and chieftains, with 25,000 troops, to different parts of Persia. The Prince Nawab Shams-ud-dowlat has been sent as commanding officer with a force of 30,000 men to Mohunna. Ghulam Hasan Khan, Duffadar, and Jafir Koli Khan have been sent with the cavalry regiments of Karrachi Daghur to Kirman. 20,000 troops well equipped and appointed have been sent to Azobia and Karribia, and the Nawab Alian-us-Sultanat, with a force of 30,000 men, 40 guns and other munitions, has been detached in the direction of Kutch and the Northern Provinces of Sind. These forces have been thus distributed that they may conquer the provinces of Afghanistan and then move onwards. The chief Sultan Ahmad Khan, Shah Dowlat Khan, Sultan Ali Khan, and Muhammad Alam Khan have been appointed to join in the conquest of India in case subordinate to the above officers. It is fully to be expected, from God’s blessing, that they will be victorious. Accordingly, now is the time for all the people of that country, and all the tribes of Afghans who believe in the Kuran, and walk in the precepts of God’s prophet, to join openly in the religious war of extermination, and to hold out the hand of support to their brother Mahomedans, for by doing so they will reap advantages both temporal and eternal. And as quelling disturbances along the frontiers even, is so trifling a matter that it may be realised by a small force of the faithful, it is incumbent on all Musulmans to assist with zeal and energy. Moreover, let it be known to all the Afghan tribes, that it is no intention of the King of Persia to conquer and annex Afghanistan as a dependency; but that, on the contrary, his real desire is that Kandahar should be subject to the chiefs Rahimid Khan and Kohundil Khan, and that the Asaf should continue, as heretofore, under the sway and government of the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, and that all the Afghans may, as before, have the blessing of liberty. It is incumbent on the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan personally, that he should adopt the counsel of his relations, and assist the Mahomedans, acting up to the traditional precept of the prophet, that he who will assist a member of the faith will receive a good reward for doing so.”

Hitherto,
Hitherto, previous to the publication of this notice, Amir Dost Muhammad Khan used always to say, that if the armies of Persia should go against a people of a different religion, he would join them with arms and money. It is manifest that now the time he used to speak of has arrived, that is, that I have declared war against the English solely in defence of the faith. Let the Amir Dost Khan now remember his promise, and join me against the enemies of the Musulmans, and let him exert every energy in his power to slay them, for no blessing, however great, can exceed the opportunity to do so. If he is killed he will be exalted to the dignity of a martyr, if he lives he will be called a defender of the faith.

In every point of view, a religious war of extermination is a most meritorious undertaking. But (God forbid it should be so) if the amir acts in a different way, first, he will have denied his religion; secondly, he will be disgraced in the estimation of the world; thirdly, he will be called a coward; and fourthly, the wrath of God will be sure to visit him.

The editor of the "Panjabi" says that the proclamation itself is a very lengthy paper, and that he has only an abstract of it, and the only good, he remarks, it seems to have done, as far as he can see, is that Mohunna was taken, and this paper found, for otherwise it is very unlikely it would ever have come here. It is quite enough, however, that the sun of the British prestige still shines unobscured. It is to be confidently believed that all the endeavours of the King of Persia will be to no purpose.

Here ends the extract from the "Panjabi." We now proceed to quote from the "Englishman." "It is rumoured that an effective and well appointed force will shortly come through the Bolan Pass, but we do not credit this report, as the hot season has set in. We hear that the chief Sultan Jan, nephew of the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, who, taking some offence against his uncle, had joined the King of Persia, is now coming with some troops from Ferriah towards Kandahar, feeling his way as he comes along. A body of Moghals, devoted to their faith, have proceeded in the direction of Persia. This event has caused much serious alarm to the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, as these Moghals are reputed to be men of both strong religious principles and martial qualifications." On the 23d April 1857, Major Lumsden, accompanied by some European officers, and Foujdar Khan, the government agent, arrived at Narab. The editor of the Kurrachee newspaper, called the "Sindhi," quoting the "Bombay Times," states in his issue, No. 38, that there is a report to the effect that 50,000 Persians, officered by some three or four Russians, had recaptured Bushire, but that the English had again taken the place, and that 300 Russians, who had part with the Persians in this fight, had suffered a very heavy loss; that a very large force is gradually assembling in the north, and that he hears the Russians are in a great strength towards the Caspian Sea and Bokhara. The editor of the "Panjabi" writes that the Persians have fully completed their arrangements, and have established cantonments in several places, as for instance, at Awarganj, Kakan, Kurbu, &c., where they have also accumulated large stores of necessaries. Ikram Khan, the chief Muhammad Azim Khan, Haidar Khan, Aflat and Jalal-ud-din Khan, the son of the late Akbar Khan, are in league with the King of Persia, and Ghulam Haidar Khan has even been honoured with a present of 20,000 rupees from the King of Persia, and is heart and soul devoted to him, and is looking out for the time when the roads will again be open. It will be nothing strange if the Persians shortly enter Kandahar, intending to advance farther. From the statements of travellers coming from Peshawur, it appears that no reliance can be placed on the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan's engagements and compacts; but how observable is God's power, by which he is thus openly sustained, notwithstanding, it is said, that there is a very large assemblage of the British troops just now at Peshawur. God forbid it; but should a battle occur in that direction, a great slaughter will be the consequence. Just now, the source of news from Persia is closed. Let not our readers imagine, as some ignorant people assert, that the British Government has prohibited the publication of intelligence. On the contrary, it is the wish of the Government that correct intelligence from distant parts of the world should be placed before the eyes of the public generally, and that the whole country may benefit by the newspapers, and this is the reason why the authorities themselves read the papers with a trust and confidence in their faithfulness, and expend their own private funds to encourage publishers and printers. But where is the help if the news itself is not forthcoming? However, let such as are interested in news from distant countries patiently look out for an early gratification, for the next mail will certainly bring news of recent dates, either of a peaceable or warlike character, and please God, I shall publish them too without prejudice or bias, for our government is a just one, which does not hinder any in the free exercise of his rights, and this is the reason why its sway is daily extending, and why the arts and sciences have attained an eminence twice as great as that of former times. May the Almighty preserve this Government in the exercise of justice to the end of time.

Proclamation of the King of Persia.

We learn from the statements of a man come from the Punjab, that the King of Persia has issued a proclamation, of which the following is the purport—

"Let all the troops assemble at different places on the frontier of Persia to resist these enemies enemies professing an antagonistic faith, viz., the English. It behoves the Arab tribes to act up to the precept of the prophet, (blessed for ever be he and his offspring!) ‘Shay all those who have caused you affliction in the same way that they intended to afflict you.’ It is now necessary that old and young, high and low, wise and foolish, peaceable and savage, should all without hesitation rise to the assistance of their co-religionists, assume arms, raise the Mahomedan standard, and inform the members of their tribes of the declaration, in the name of God, of a religious war of extermination, for God will bestow the fruition of their hopes on those defenders of the faith who will thus exert themselves, and we too will be much blessed with them. I have sent the noble amongst nobles, Mirza Muhammad Jan Kuti, Sachahi; the champion of the nation, the chief Mir Ali Khan; and other generals, officers and chiefs, with 25,000 troops, to different parts of Persia. The Prince Nawab Shamshir ud-dowlat has been sent as commanding officer with a force of 30,000 men to Bushire, the place from which the English ran away to Bombay. Ghulam Hasan Khan, Duffadar, and Jafar Kuli Khan Mir Panja have been sent with the cavalry regiments of Kurrachi Diggir to Kirman. 20,000 troops, well equipped and appointed, have been sent to Asibin and Kurbia, and the Nawab Ahsan ud-sultanat, with a force of 30,000 men, 40 guns and other munitions, has been detached in the direction of Kutch and the northern provinces of Sind. These forces have been thus distributed that they may conquer the provinces of Afghanistan, and then move onwards. The Chief Sultan Ahmad Khan, Shah Dowlat Khan, Sultan Ali Khan, and Muhammad Alam Khan, have been appointed to join in the conquest of India, in posts subordinate to the above officers. It is fully to be expected, from God’s blessing, that they will be victorious, and that they will not leave the English any resting place this side of London. Accordingly, now is the time for all the people of that country, all the tribes of Afghanistan, and the inhabitants of India who believe in the Koran, and walk in the precepts of God’s prophet, to join openly in the religious war of extermination, to stand by their faith, and to hold out the hand of support to their brother Mahomedans, for by doing so they will reap advantages both temporal and eternal. It is incumbent on all Mussulmans to assist with zeal and energy in this matter. Moreover, let it be known to all the tribes of Afghanistan and India, that it is no intention of this to conquer and annex Afghanistan as a dependency; but that, on the contrary, his real desire is that Kundahar should be subject to the chief Raahandil Khan and Kohundil Khan; Cabul to the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan; and India to the house of Taimur. It is incumbent on the amir personally to adopt the counsels of his relations and assist the Mahomedans, and to expel from his heart the aversion of getting a lakh of rupees a month, according to the tradition that it is a saying of the prophet, that he who will assist a member of the faith will receive a good reward for doing so. Hitherto, previous to the publication of this notice, Amir Dost Muhammad Khan used always to say that if the armies of Persia should go against a people of a different religion, he would join them with armies and money. It is manifest that now the time he used to speak of has arrived, so let the amir exert every energy in his power to kill the enemies of the Mahomedans, for no blessing can be greater than the opportunity to do so. If he is killed he will be venerated as a martyr; if he lives he will be called a defender of the faith. In every point of view a religious war of extermination is a meritorious undertaking. But (and God forbid it should be so) if the amir acts in a different way, he will to a certainty be called a Christian, and the wrath of God will shortly fall on him. The King of Persia has sent also the following letter to the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan. ‘Oh! Amir! have you joined the English, and become a renegade from your faith! I, as a Mussulman, counsel you to separate yourself from this people, and to join me and contrive means for their ruin. Know, moreover, that all the Mussulmans consider that the amir, by joining the English, has brought disgrace on the true religion. If arrogance is the cause of your conduct, take twice the amount of gold from me. And have you not heard what breaches of treaties and engagements this race have practised with the princes and chiefs of Hindustan? The amir evinced much respect for this letter, and resolved on coming in this direction himself, accompanied by the chief of Swat. The King of Persia has entered Herat, and the troops at Kundahar have totally cut up the English who had gone forward in advance.’

Arrival of the Persian Army.—A friend of mine possessing great judgment, and speaking the Persian tongue, who has recently arrived, states that the Persian forces, which had for a considerable length of time been lying at Farrah, near Herat, under the command of Sultan Jan Khan, son of Kohundil Khan, have now, with the permission of the King of Persia, moved on to the north. In hearing this, the son of Amir Dost Muhammad Khan met them with two or three thousand effective and disciplined soldiers. The battle lasted for nine days, and some hundreds were killed and wounded on both sides. Eventually the amir’s son fled from the field and took refuge in the fort, when the Persian troops completely invested Kundahar, and have almost cut off supplies of water and food. The amir’s son has therefore applied for some reinforcements from Cabul, which it is said the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan will send very shortly; it is said also that the amir has sent a letter full of entreaty and supplication to the King of Persia, saying that he is as any other of the king's subjects or servants, that he has no desire to have anything to do with helping the English, and urging the king certainly to advance his troops towards India, promising that he will not hold back in anything he may be able to do in the way of furnishing supplies or assisting with forces. It was reported also that the amir will send the King of Persia some money and presents of valuable rarities. The Prince Muhammad Yusuf, Chief of Herat, is in the habit of communicating to the King of Persia all matters of intelligence connected with Hindustan and the piratical English. The King of Persia has great confidence in this prince, and occasionally adopts some of his suggestions and ideas.

Craftiness of the King of Persia.—With reference to the fact that the King of Persia, after several fights with the accursed unbelieving English, sent proposals for peace through Farrukh Khan, I saw through it from the first, that it was not without an object. As a poet says, "The civilities of a censor are not disinterested;" and I felt convinced that there was some concealed craftiness in the proposals. I now feel I have reason to compliment myself on my penetration, for I now learn from a trustworthy slayer of the accursed infidels, that the real object of the Persians was that they might continue in occupation of Herat, and the English retire from Abushahr. Accordingly, the event has been as was expected. In observance of the treaty of peace between the two powers, the English completely evacuated Abushahr; but when this was done, the King of Persia would not give up Herat. At this the English are very much ashamed and vexed, and say that they will bring the Persians to a proper understanding for this. This, however, is only an idle threat; we should reflect, when they had some power, much or little as it may have been, what were they able to do then that they would do over again now? The same person states also that the Persians, considering the present opportunity one which should not be lost, have advanced on this side of Kandahar, in force to the extent of 50,000 men; that the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan is, to all appearances, still keeping up his friendship with the cursed infidels; but that secretly he is using all means of insinuation and persuasion with the Persians, and that it is in consequence of this that the Persian army, some officers of which are from amongst the nobles of Cabul, is steadily advancing towards India. Continuing to hear such news as the above, the Christians are becoming more alarmed, and admit that the downfall of the Company has now certainly come.

News of the Persian Army.—Some people coming from the direction of Peshawar and the Panjab, state that the Persian army has reached Attock. Although I do not fully believe this myself, I have published it as hearsay gossip, for the thing is possible, and not by any means so unlikely, that it should at once be considered and pronounced false. But nevertheless it must be admitted that from the way in which people just now talk, no intelligence can be relied on or believed. Under these circumstances, when inserting news, it is right to avoid observations and speculations in reference to it.

Near approach of the Persian Army.—The editor of the "Triumphant News" says, he has heard from some people coming from the direction of Peshawar that the Persian army has fought its way up to Attock. The editor does not believe this, but for several reasons it appears to me deserving of credence. First, No man says anything unless he has some little grounds. Secondly, There is a prophecy of the saint, the revered Shah Niamat-Ulla Moulavy, in verse, to the following effect: "After the fire-worshippers and Christians shall have held sway over the whole of Hindustan for 100 years, and when injustice and oppression shall prevail in their government, an Arab prince will be born who will ride forth triumphantly to slay them." Thirdly, When the troops mutinied at Multan, some of the men stated that their officers had for a long time been maintaining an interchange of letters with the King of Persia. Fourthly, A spy sent by the King of Persia, hearing that a friend of mine in the British dominions was a staunch zealot for Mahomedanism, met and told him that the King of Persia had definitely determined on coming to India. Thus, then, whether he come early or late, there is no doubt he will come. God only has prescience of the future.

Local News.—Persia.—Some people now again say that the Persian army has come through the Bolan and Bibi Narri passes, and that the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan cheerfully gave them a free passage through his dominions; but according to the common Indian idea, that “A Brahman believes in the promise of a feast only when he gets it,” the people of India will believe this matter only when they have some clear proof; but from certain signs, nevertheless, we cannot help allowing credence to some extent; for whether the present intelligence be correct or false, we must believe that the Persian troops will come, whether by Bolan, or Bombay, or Sindh, it does not matter. God only is all-powerful and omniscient.

Order under the Official Seal of Mirza Moghal, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, dated 13th September 1857.

To the Emblem of Valour, the Chief Police Officer of the City of Delhi.

May you be protected.

Intelligence has just been brought that the English intend making a general attack to-night, you are therefore directed to have it proclaimed by beat of drum throughout the city, that it is incumbent on all the inhabitants, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, from a due regard to their faith, to assemble immediately in the direction of the Cashmere Gate, bringing iron picks and shovels with them. Consider this order imperative.

Copy of an Order from the King, without Signature, Cypher, or Seal; but the Order was issued under his Seal. No date.

To Our Son, the Illustrious and Valiant Mirza Zahur-ud-din, otherwise Mirza Moghal Bahadar.

Learn! That when the troops, infantry and cavalry, first came to the royal presence, I told them personally, by word of mouth, that I had no treasures or property with which to assist them, but that I had no reluctance to stake my life if that could help them. They all expressed themselves satisfied with this declaration on my part, and even pledged themselves to sacrifice their lives in subordination and obedience to my commands. On this they were directed, as a first step, to make proper provisions for the magazine and treasure, so that they might afterwards be profitably used by them and me. After this, they took up their quarters in the Halls of Special and Public Audience, the Mahab Garden, and other places, and behaved just as they pleased. Inconsideration of their ignorance, and from a regard for their comforts, the servants of the state were prohibited from preventing them. In the next place, although no promise had been made in the matter, money was borrowed in order that daily allowances might be paid to every man of the cavalry and infantry. Repeated injunctions have been issued prohibiting plunder and aggression in the city, but all to no purpose; for although 10 days have now elapsed, the same evils are prevailing to the present time. Moreover, the regiments of infantry have certainly left the Halls of Special and Public Audience, but notwithstanding that they were imperatively ordered to encamp outside the city, and the men of the army, whether cavalry or infantry, were prohibited going about armed through the city, and oppressing the inhabitants, yet one regiment of infantry has taken up its quarters at the Delhi, another at the Lahore, and a third at the Ajmir Gate, within the walls of the city, and have thoroughly desolated several of the bazaars. Moreover, without reference to night or day, they enter and plunder the houses of the inhabitants on the false plea that they have concealed Europeans. They force locks and shut doors and openly carry away the property from the shops, and they forcibly loose the horses of the cavalry and take them off. They commit these excesses in the face of the fact that all cities taken without military operations have ever been exempted from sack and slaughter. Even Jangiz Khan and Nadir Shah, kings executed as tyrants, gave peace and protection to such cities as surrendered without resistance. Moreover, the men of the army go about threatening and intimidating the royal servants and the inhabitants of the city. Again, although repeated orders have been issued to the infantrymen occupying the royal farash-khana, and the regiment of cavalry staying in the garden, to evacuate these places, they have not yet done so. These are places which not even Nadir Shah nor Ahmad Shah nor nor any of the British Governor-generals of India ever entered on horseback. The troops first requested that the princes royal might be appointed to the different commands in the army, promising they would obey them. This was done. They next urged that it would afford them greater confidence, if dresses of honour should be bestowed on the princes to give a character of stability to their appointment as commanders, and if all the (European) princes should ride side-saddle. This was complied with; as on the 22nd day a notification, under the special seal, was issued publicly, proclaiming that courts of justice had been established in the city, and prohibiting acts of violence on the part of the soldiery. This even had no effect. Setting aside all these points, it may be remarked that whenever the most distinguished officers of the highest ranks in the service of the British Government visited the palace, they dismounted at the door of the Hall of Public Audience, and came thence on foot. These soldiery, however, used, till recently, to come up to the Hall of Special Audience on their horses, and as a last resort, both the gates were closed, a wicket only being left open; but they still ride up to the Hall of Public Audience, and the Jalwa-khanna, unsuitably dressed, and without their turbans, in utter disregard to the forms of respect due to royalty. The officers of the army too make a practice of coming into court carelessly dressed, wearing caps instead of turbans and carrying their swords. Never during the British rule did any members of their profession behave in this way. Again, notwithstanding that they have themselves uselessly wasted the whole of the magazine stores, and the money that was in the treasury, they now clamorously demand allowances daily, and above all daily take allowances for more men than are present. Besides this, with oppression and violence they forcibly take away the wares of the shopkeepers in the city without paying for them, and commit, moreover, every variety of other excesses and aggressions imaginable. The state of things outside the city also demands notice. In consequence of no military troops going out to keep order, hundreds of the property of thousands is being plundered. As regards the civil administration of the country, in consequence of the insufficiency of the royal troops for the management of the whole of the provinces, revenue and police officers cannot be established, and yet none of the military troops, whether cavalry or infantry, can be prevailed on to move out beyond the palace and city. Under these circumstances, it is matter for distressingly serious reflection how supplies are to be procured from the country, and how the revenues of the State are to be realized. Accordingly, nothing but the total desolation of the city and country can be expected as the inevitable end of this state of matters. In addition to all that has been above noticed, the soldiery accusing the royal servants of entertaining views and feelings opposite to their own, subject them to indignities, and when they come to claim their daily allowances or ammunition enforce their demands with unbecoming assumption of authority, notwithstanding that the royal servants, in consequence of orders to them to that effect, use nothing but entreaty and every other means of conciliation, and yet the soldiery will not be satisfied. Under these circumstances, how is it to be believed that these people can have the welfare of the State at heart, or that they cherish any desire to yield subjection and obedience to the royal authority? It is further to be considered, that there is no money in the royal treasury, and the city merchants having been plundered and ruined have no longer the ability to provide a loan. How then are the daily allowances to be paid for any length of time? And when they shall, of necessity, have been discontinued, from the country shall also have ceased, what will be the state of things then? The most ridiculously singular part of the proceedings of the soldiery is, that while they themselves commit these acts subversive of all rule, they lay the blame of the misrule on the royal servants. In short, when such is the return made by the soldiery, it is evident that they have no desire to act in any way to the advantage and benefit of the government, and it is equally evident that the utter ruin of the sovereignty must ensue. Wearyed and helpless, we have now resolved on making a vow to pass the remainder of our days in services acceptable to God, and relinquishing the title of sovereign fraught with cares and troubles, and in our present griefs and sorrows, assuming the garb of a religious mendicant, to proceed first and stay at the shrine of the saint Khwaja Sahib, and, after making necessary arrangements for the journey, to go eventually to Mecca. It should be considered that when these troops came, the king’s servants or the residents of the city did not oppose them in any way, nor did they commit any act of hostility against them, and they are accordingly not liable to the forfeiture of life and property; for if, as the representative of the feelings of the people, we had considered the soldiery in the light of enemies, why should we have made common cause with them, and why should we have directly associated our offsprings with them in their undertaking? The tyranny and oppression now prevailing are a disgrace to our royal self, as tending to the belief that we, as sovereign, are a party to them, and that we approve of rapine and murder. It is worthy of consideration, that when there is amity and good feelings between the king and populace on one side, and the army on the other, it is by good acts like these that their good name and acts which even an enemy or hostile force would not commit. The more praiseworthy and prudent course for them would have been to protect and cherish the people, to study the approbation of the sovereign, and to preserve unanimity and fellowship with the servants of the State. It was the peace and quiet which would have resulted from this line of conduct that we had expected. You, our son, will now therefore send for all the officers of the cavalry, and explain to them if they are really disposed to serve the State, they ought to execute a written agreement to that effect according to a form which will be furnished; when, for their assurance and satisfaction, we also will give them a written document, and that they should take immediate steps to suppress the evil and unbecoming acts and proceedings now prevailing; that the tents of the infantry regiments be this very day removed to the outside of the city; that every soldier of the army proved guilty of the murder and plunder of any resident of the city be adequately punished, so that others may have no hopes of impunity for such acts; and that whenever royal orders directing the movements of regiments, whether singly or in numbers, with the view of their quelling disturbances and keeping order in the country may be issued, they should march without murmur or grumbling, and should make no obstinate demands for provisions and ammunition beyond such as may be reasonable. Certainly, when authentic information of the near approach of the English army is received, both these regiments will be at liberty to return, and then fight and engage in the operations of war as they may themselves arrange and deem expedient, and also determine what amount of forces should be severally kept in different places, and distribute the army accordingly. Then there will be a necessity for the troops being within the city; but there is none just now, seeing the country and city are being alike desolated, and none of the soldiery can be prevailed on to move from his quarters to make the least effort. You will further explain to them that if they are not disposed willingly and unanimously to acquiesce in the above views and wishes, desiring rest and quiet, we shall adopt the profession of a religious mendicant, and shall go to the shrine of the Khalwa Sahib. Let none of them say anything to prevent this step, but let them quietly remain masters of the palace, the city, and the country. For none of the kings of the oldest antiquity, nor of the warriors who came after them down to modern times, ever subjected any one claiming shelter and quiet to oppression and hardship, but freely allowed him his own way. You will get the army to embody their answer to the two alternatives presented herein for their selection in a petition which you are directed to have attested with the seals and signatures of the officers, and to forward to the royal presence. You are directed to consider this not as any light or trivial business, for in consequence of our advanced age and infirmity, we are not able to support the burden of such excessive anxiety. The government of a nation, and the control of an army, are not to be treated with the same levity as child's play.

There are notes on all these papers to the effect that copies had been taken, and from this it would appear that at the time the originals were despatched, the office books must have been in arrears, and that these hastily-written copies were taken, that when the books should be written up to date, the copies in the books might be made from them.

First.—A petition from Muhammad Bakht Khan, purporting to enclose a missive for the ruler of Jummu that the King's special seal might be affixed to it; dated 22d August 1857.

To the King! Shelter of the World!

(May his prosperity continue!)

Your Majesty,—I enclose a missive to the address of the ruler of Jummu, and pray that it may be authenticated with an impression from the special seal in the cypher, and returned.
returned to me. (Prayers for the prosperity of the reign.) Petition of the special slave.
Copy of seal upside down, thus:

Commander-in-Chief of the Army
Mahomed Habib Khan

Secondly.—The King’s order on the above petition.

The seal * on this petition has been affixed upside down. However this autograph order is written right.

The special seal engraved in the cypher has been affixed agreeably to your request to the missive which is now sent to you.

Thirdly.—The missive to the ruler of Jummao, which formed the enclosure to the petition; dated 22d August 1857:

To the devotedly Faithful and Zealous Rajah Gulab Singh, Ruler of Jummao.

Consider yourself honoured and learned. That I have been made thoroughly acquainted, by your petition, with all the particulars of the slaughter throughout your territory of the accused unbelieving English. You are considered worthy of a hundred commendations. You have acted in this matter as all brave men ever acquit themselves. May you live and prosper! Of the small number of infidels, who in jeopardy of their lives had betaken themselves to their entrenchments on the ridge, considering them a refuge and protection, many have been killed, and the very few holding on in their precarious existence are equally doomed to extermination, and will now very soon receive the punishment due to their iniquities. The Bombay force, numerically above 60,000, has now safely reached Ajmir, having sought out and slaughtered all the accused unbelievers about Bikanir, Jodhpur, Kota, and Jaipur, and in the districts belonging to them, and will, it is reported, now reach the seat of Government, Delhi, in a week or 10 days. May God protect them from all evils! Under these circumstances, you are directed not to take into account the difficulties to be expected from the present being the wet season of the year, but giving due respect to this order, immediately on receipt to use all diligence to come to the royal presence, bringing your tributary contributions of money with you, and to slay the accused unbelieving English and all other enemies wherever you may find them on the way. Whatever may be your hopes and expectations, the dignity and elevation to which you will be promoted amongst your equals, will surpass all that you may be able to imagine, and you will further be rewarded and dignified with the title of Rajah. Consider yourself the object of our favour.

Fourthly.—Copy of an order to the officers of the army:—

To the Officers of the Regular Cavalry, Infantry and Artillery.

When complete victory shall have been obtained, and the revenues of the conquered countries shall again, as heretofore, be paid into the treasury, the pay of the troops will be regulated according to the following scale:—

| Trooper of regular cavalry | 120 rupees per mensem. |
| Private in the regular infantry | 10  |
| Private in the regular artillery | Blank. |

Other troops:

| Trooper | 14 rupees per mensem. |
| Foot soldier | 8  |

The monthly allowances of all others will be fixed by reference to their qualifications and exertions, and as the protection of the people is very much desired, all those who will oppress or ill-use them will receive due punishment. You are urged to trust in God’s blessing, and cherish full hopes of victory, and of the realisation of the revenue, and, thus animated, to exert every energy for the welfare of the State, and with full confidence of success to fight with courage and intrepidity. You are directed to act according to these orders.

The Court, at two p. m., adjourns till 11 a.m. to-morrow, to enable the prisoner to complete his defence.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, 9th March 1858.

The Court re-assembled this morning at 11 a.m. in the hall of special audience in the palace at Delhi, pursuant to adjournment of the 4th instant.

The President, members, interpreter and Deputy Judge Advocate-general are all present.

The prisoner, attended by his attorney, Ghulam Abbas, is brought into court.

The Judge Advocate now reads the translation of the prisoner's defence, which is entered as follows:

TRANSLATION of the Written Defence put in by Bahadar Shah, ex-King of Delhi.

The real facts are as follows:—I had had no intelligence on the subject previously to the day of the outbreak. About eight o'clock a.m., the mutinous troopers suddenly arrived and set up a noisy clamour under the palace windows, saying they had come from Meerut after killing all the English there; and stating, as their reason for having done so, that they had been required to bite with their teeth, cartridges greased with the fat of oxen and swine, in open violation of the caste of both Hindus and Mussulmans. When I heard this, I immediately had the gates under the palace windows closed, and sent intelligence to the commandant of the palace guards. On receiving the message, he came personally, and wishing to go out where the troopers were collected, requested that the gate might be opened. I kept him from his purpose, however, and when I would not allow the gate to be opened, he walked up to the balustrade, and said something to the troopers, who then went away. After this, the commandant of the palace guards left me, saying he would make arrangements immediately to put down the disturbance. Very shortly after, Mr. Fraser sent a message for two guns, and the commandant another for two palanquins, saying that two ladies were staying with him, and requesting that I would have them taken to and concealed in my private female apartments. I sent the palanquins immediately, and gave orders at the same time that the guns should also be taken. Very soon after this, I heard that before the palanquins could reach them, Mr. Fraser, the commandant of the palace guards, and the ladies, had all been killed. Not long after this the mutinous soldiery rushed into the hall of special audience, crowding into the court-yard, the hall of special audience itself, and the hall of devotion, surrounding me completely, and placing sentries on all sides. I asked them what their object was, and begged of them to go away. In reply, they told me to remain a quiet spectator, saying, that they had staked their lives, and would now do all that might be in their power. Fearing that I should be killed, I kept quiet and went to my own private apartments. Near evening, these traitors brought, as prisoners, some European men and women whom they had found in the magazine, and resolved on killing them. I had recourse to persuasion, and succeeded in getting their lives spared for the time.

The mutinous soldiers, however, kept them prisoners in their own custody. Subsequently, on two occasions, they again determined on killing these Europeans, when I again restrained them from their purpose by entreaty and persuasion, and saved the lives of the prisoners. However, on the last occasion, though I again did all in my power to reason with the rebellious soldiery, they would not heed me, and carried out their purpose of slaying these poor people. I gave no orders for this slaughter. Mirza Moghal, Mirza Khair Sultan, Mirza Abul-bakr, and Basant one of my own personal attendants, who had leagued with the soldiery, may have made use of my name; but I have no knowledge that they did; nor do I know that my own armed retainers, acting independently of my orders, joined in the slaughter. If they did so, they may have been urged on to it by Mirza Moghal. Even after the massacre, no one gave me any information regarding it. In reference to what some of the witnesses have said in evidence regarding my servants having joined in killing Mr. Fraser and the commandant of the palace guards, guards, I make the same answer, viz., that I gave them no orders. That if they did so, they did it of their own free will. I had no knowledge of it, and this matter also was not communicated to me. I swear by God, who is my witness, that I did not give orders for the death of Mr. Fraser or of any other European; Mukund Lai and other witnesses in saying that I did, have spoken falsely. That Mirza Moghal and Mirza Khair Sultan may have given orders would not be strange, for they had leagued with the revolted soldiery. After these occurrences, the rebellious troops brought Mirza Moghal, Mirza Khair Sultan, and Abulbaker, and said they wished to have them as their officers. In the first instance, I rejected their request; but when the soldiery persisted, and Mirza Moghal in anger went off to his mother's house, from dread of the soldiery, I kept quiet in the matter, and then by mutual consent on both sides, Mirza Moghal was appointed to be Commander-in-chief of the army. As regards the orders under my seal, and under my signature, the real state of the case is, that from the day the soldiery came and killed the European officers, and made me a prisoner, I remained in their power as such. All papers they thought fit, they caused to be prepared, and, bringing them to me, compelled me to affix my seal. Sometimes they brought the rough drafts of orders, and had fair copies of them made by my secretary. At other times, they brought the original letters intended for despatch, and left copies of them in the office. Hence several rough drafts in a diversity of hands have been filed in the proceedings. Frequently they had the seal impressed on the outside of empty unaddressed envelopes. There is no knowing what orders they sent in these or to whom they sent them. There is a petition in the proceedings without an address from Mukund Lai to some unknown party, in which a list is given of the number of orders issued on that date. In this catalogue it is distinctly specified that so many orders were written under the direction of so and so; so many orders under that of such a one, and so on, but not one is ascribed to me. Accordingly, this also proves, that whoever wished, had orders written as he chose, without my seeing them with their purport, while I was being in jeopardy of our lives, could not dare to say anything in the matter. It was just the same case as regards the petitions bearing orders in my own writing. Whenever the soldiers or Mirza Moghal, or Mirza Khair Sultan, or Abulbaker, brought a petition, they invariably came accompanied by the officers of the army, and brought the order they desired, written on a separate piece of paper, and compelled me to transcribe it with my own hand on the petition. Matters went on in the same way; that is to say, that I might hear them, that those who would not attend to their wishes would be made to repeat their conduct, and for fear of them I could say nothing. Moreover, they used to accuse my servants of sending letters to and of keeping in league with the English, more particularly the physician Ahsan Ullah Khan, Mabub Ali Khan, and the queen Zinat Mahab, whom they said they would kill for doing so. Thus one day, they did actually plunder the physician's house, and made him a prisoner, intending to kill him; but refrained from their purpose only after much entreaty and supplication, keeping him a prisoner, however, still. After this, they placed others of my servants in arrest, for instance Shamshir-ud-dowlah, the father of the queen Zinat Mahab. They even declared they would depose me, and make Mirza Moghal king. It is a matter for patient and just consideration then, what power in any way did I possess, or what reason had I to be satisfied with them? The officers of the army went even so far as to require that I should make over the queen Zinat Mahab to them that they might keep her a prisoner, saying they maintained friendly relations with the English. Now, if I was in the full exercise of power and authority, should I have permitted the physician Ahsan Ullah Khan's and Mabub Ali Khan's imprisonment; and should I have allowed the physician's house to be plundered? The mutinous soldiery had established a court in which all matters were deliberated on, and such measures as, after deliberation, were sanctioned by this council they adopted; but I never took any part in their conferences. Thus, without my knowledge or orders, they plundered, not only many individuals, but several entire streets, plundering, robbing, killing and imprisoning all they chose; and forcibly extorting whatever sums of money they thought fit from the merchants and other respectable residents of the city, and appropriating such exactions to their own private purposes. All that has been done, was done by that rebellious army. I was in their power, what could I do? They came suddenly, and made me a prisoner. I was helpless, and constrained by my fears, I did whatever they required, otherwise they would immediately have killed me. This is universally known. I found myself in such a predicament that I was weary of my life, while my officials had no hopes of theirs being spared. In this state of things, I resolved to accept poverty, and adopted the garb, coloured with red earth, of a religious mendicant, intending to go first to the shrine of the Koth Sabih, thence to Ajmir, and from Ajmir eventually to Mecca; but the army would not allow me; it was the soldiery who plundered the Government magazine and treasury, and did what they pleased. I took nothing from them, nor did they bring any of the plunder to me. They, one day, went to the palace of queen Zinat Mahab, intending to plunder it, but did not succeed in breaching the open door. It should accordingly be considered if they were subservient to any authority, or had I been in league with them, how would these things have occurred? In addition to all this, it is worthy of consideration that no person demands the wife of the poorest man, saying, "Give her to me, I will make her a prisoner." As regards the Abyssinian, Kambar, he obtained leave from me to go on a pilgrimage to Mecca. I did not send him to Persia, nor did I send any letters by him to the Persian king. Some one has falsely circulated this story: Muhammad Durwesh's petition is no document of mine that it should be trusted; if any enemy of mine or of the Mian* Hasan Askari has sent this petition, it ought not to be relied on. As regards the behaviour of that rebellion army, it may be doubted if they never saluted me even when they showed no other mark of respect. They used to walk into the hall of special audience and the hall of devotion with their shoes on. What confidence could I place in troops who had murdered their own masters? In the same way that they murdered them, they made me a prisoner, and tyrannised over me, keeping me on in order to make use of my name as a sanction for their acts. Seeing that these troops killed their own officers, men of high authority and power, how was I, without an army, without treasure, without stores of ammunition, without artillery, to have resisted them, or make arrangements against them? But I never gave them aid in any shape. When the mutinous troopers first arrived, the gateway under the palace windows being in my power, I had it closed. I sent for the commandant of the palace guards, and acquainted him with what had happened, and prevented his going amongst the mutineers. I also immediately sent two palanquins for the ladies, and two guns for the protection of the palace gate, on the several requisitions of the commandant of the palace guards and the agent to the Lieutenant-governor. Moreover, I dispatched a letter the same night by camel express to his honour the Lieutenant-governor of Agra, acquainting him with the calamitous occurrences which had happened here. So long as I had power, I did all that I was able. I did not go out in procession of my own free will. I was in the power of the soldiery, and they forcibly did what they pleased. The few servants I engaged, I engaged for the protection of my own life, in consequence of my fears of the revolted and rebellious troops. When these troops prepared to destroy an opportunity, I got away secretly under the palace windows, and went and stayed in Humayun's Mausoleum. From this place I was summoned, with a guarantee that my life should be spared, and I at once placed myself under the protection of the Government. The mutinous troops wished to take me with them, but I would not go. In all the above, which I have caused to be written from my own dictation, there is not the smallest falsehood nor deviation from truth. God knows, and is my witness, that I have written only what is strictly true, and the whole of what I can remember. I told you with an oath at the commencement, that I would write only the truth, without addition or deficiency, and so I have now done.

Postscript.—With reference to the copy of an order to Mirza Moghal, complaining of the acts of the soldiery and explaining my resolve, in consequence, to go to the shrine of the Khwaja Sahib and thence to Mecca, which has been filed in the proceedings, I declare that I have no recollection of such an order having been issued. The order in question is in the Urdu tongue, contrary to the rule in my secretariat office, where all such papers were written in Persian, and I accordingly do not know how and where it was prepared. It appears that seeing I was thoroughly wearied by the army, and that I had, in consequence resolved on discarding the world, accepting poverty, and going to Mecca, Mirza Moghal must have had it written in his office, and had my seal affixed to it. At all events, my displeasure against the army as well as my perfect helplessness, is proved by the order in question also, which corroborates all that I have said above. As regards the other documents, besides the one just referred to, viz., the copies of the missive to the Nizam-ul-Mulk, and Bakht Khan's petition, my autograph order on it, attested with my seal, and other papers which have been filed in the proceedings, I affirm that I have no recollection of them; but I have already stated that the officers of the army caused whatever orders they chose to be written without my knowledge, and had them attested with my seal; and I feel convinced that these must be of the same kind, and that they must have compelled me to write with my hand the order they wished on Bakht Khan's petition, in the same way that they did in the case of every other petition.

The Judge-Advocate-General then addressed the Court as follows:

Gentlemen,—It will be my object, in the present address, to collect the different facts which have been elicited in the course of these proceedings, and to furnish them to you, as far as possible, in the order in which they originally occurred. Our investigation has involved inquiry over a period of several months, when rebellion was rampant in this city; and I trust we have succeeded in tracing, with considerable minuteness, many of the different events as they evolved themselves during the time to which I have referred. Our labours, indeed, have not had this limit, or we should only have accomplished what might, I think, be termed the least important part of our duties. In immediate connection with the facts elicited are the charges on which the prisoner has been arraigned; and, though his former rank and royalty will doubtless add somewhat of temporary importance to the verdict which you will this day be called upon to record, yet whether it be one of acquittal or conviction, it must, I imagine, prove light in the balance when weighed against those more monstrous points to which so much attention has been, and for a long time will still be, directed. I, of course, allude to the causes, either remote or immediate, which gave rise to a revolt unparalleled in the annals of history, either for the savagery which has been its distinctive feature, or for the suddenness with which elements, hitherto deemed utterly discordant on the score of religion, have united themselves in a common crusade against a faith which, as regards the inhabitants of this country, whether Mahomedan or Hindu, was certainly the most unaggressive one. I fear, however, the subject is still but imperfectly elucidated, and I may, perhaps, be in error in attributing to a religious influence a movement which, after all, may prove to have been merely a political one; a struggle of the natives for power and place, by the expulsion from the country of a people alien in religion, in blood, in colour, in habits, in feelings, and in everything. Whatever the final opinion on this subject may be, the questions which, as far as I am aware of, have not as yet found a satisfactory solution, are, by what circumstances was this most atrocious revolt, with its series of massacres, brought-about, and who were its prime original instigators? I feel the members of this Court will join with me in deeming that our proceedings do not furnish a full and complete answer to such questions; and why do they not? I believe it is simply owing to the circumstance that any merely local investigation must be inadequate to collect evidence from the different quarters and sources, which are no doubt available elsewhere. We may still, however, hope that our efforts on this point have not been fruitless or unavailing; if we cannot congratulate ourselves on an entire success, we may perhaps be allowed credit for a near approach to it. Few, I imagine, will peruse these voluminous proceedings without coming to the conclusion that intrigues and conspiracy have long been rife at this fostering Court of Delhi. Insignificant and contemptible as to any outward show of power, it would appear that this possessor of mere nominal royalty has ever been looked upon by Mahomedan fanaticism as the head and culminating star of its faith, for him have still been centred the hopes and aspirations of millions. They have looked up to him as the source of honour, and, more than this, he has proved the rallying point not only to Mahomedans, but to thousands of others with whom it was supposed no bond of fanatical union could possibly be established. To throw the fullest light on a subject like this, is not the work of a day or of a month; time, the great revealer of secrets, will doubtless, sooner or later, lay bare the springs from which a stream of so much evil and misery has flowed; but, till then, we must be content with such views as our present investigation affords. That we have been able to unravel many of the secret workings of the conspirators will, I believe, be conceded; but let me not anticipate. This is a point of our inquiry on which I propose to offer some observations hereafter; but a concise narrative of events will perhaps best suit the commencement of this address.

I may state, then, that 85 men, non-commissioned officers and troopers of the 3rd Light Cavalry, who were tried by general court-martial at Meerut in May last, for refusing their cartridges, had their sentence read to them and were ironed on the parade-ground early on the morning of the 9th of May, and that the mutiny of the three native regiments at Meerut first openly developed itself at about half-past six o'clock on the evening of the 10th of May, during which interval of nearly 36 hours there were, of course, plenty of opportunities for interchange of communications between the native troops who first rebelled at Meerut, and those who joined them at this station. To travel from one place to another by coach ordinarily takes about five hours; and that the mutineers availed themselves of this facility of mutual intercourse has, I think, been clearly established by the evidence of Captain Tytler. It appears from his statement, that a coach, full of these Meerut mutineers, came on Sunday evening to the lines of the 38th Native Infantry, doubtless to prepare the sepoys of this station for the arrival and suitable reception, on Monday morning, of their rebel comrades; and although we may not possess positive evidence to the fact, yet it may fairly be presumed that Sunday evening was not the first occasion that these plotters of evil held their secret and sinister councils together. Indeed we have it on record that, even before the Court, which tried the mutinous cavalry at Meerut, had come to any decision on their case, a compact had been entered into to the effect that if the use of greased cartridges was persisted in, the troops at Meerut and Delhi would unite, and at once unfurl the standard of revolt; and so fully had this arrangement been perfected and agreed on, that it is related that the sepoy guards at the gate of the palace on Sunday evening made no secret of their intentions, but spoke openly among themselves of what they expected to occur on the morrow. To understand the merits and demerits of the whole transaction, it must be recollected that, at the time when these resolutions were arrived at, there was not a single greased cartridge in the magazines of either of the three native regiments at Meerut, nor, as far as I have been informed, of those at Delhi either. It must, be further borne in mind that the native soldiers themselves were the persons who were perhaps the best informed on these points; the cartridges for practice had, from time immemorial, been manufactured in the regimental magazines by persons of their own colour, creed, and religious persuasion; that it was absolutely impossible to palm off on them a spurious article; that the regimental khulasses, who were employed in making these cartridges, must have at once discovered their impurity, if such had really existed; that, in fact, objectionable cartridges (I mean such as would affect the religious prejudices of either Musulman or Hindu) could not possibly have been made in their regimental magazines, as in such case the very men to be employed in their manufacture would have refused their work; but, more than this, let it be remembered that the Mahomedan, has no caste, that, even the hybrid such as the Mahomedans of Central India has become, half Musulman and half Hindu, does not pretend to a loss of religion, even from touching pork. Who is there amongst us that has not met amongst these Mahomedans, in the capacity of table servants, carrying plates and dishes which openly contain the very substance which, in reference to the cartridges, has been made the pretence and the stumbling block of their offence. Even if we were to admit that all the cartridges were thoroughly saturated with pig's and with cow's fat, still what real valid objection on the score of their religion could the Mahomedan sepoys have had in using them? Their brothers and other relatives in the private service of officers never hesitate to handle or cook the dishes which they are required to bring to our tables. The objections of the Mahomedan sepoys on this head are so transparently false that it can hardly be a matter of wonder that not one man of sense or responsibility among them appears ever to have come forward to seek information or to satisfy himself as to the truth or falsity of rumours so industriously circulated about these cartridges that were to be the means of depriving them of their faith. Some few—very few—honourable exceptions have certainly held aloof from and openly repudiated the conduct of their brethren; but such men have wanted neither guarantees nor explanations in regard to a matter which was patent to all, but have come to their own conclusions on a subject where error had no abiding place and mistake is incredible. That neither Mussulman nor Hindu had any honest objection to the use of any of the cartridges at Meerut or at Delhi is sufficiently proved by the eagerness with which they sought possession of them, and the alacrity with which they used them, when their aim and object was the murder of their European officers, or when, united under the banners of the prisoners at your bar, they, for months, constantly went forth to fight against the power to which they owed fealty and allegiance. Among the very numerous petitions which have been brought under your notice during these proceedings, it may have struck the Court as strange that there is not a single one in which the slightest allusion is made to what the sepoys would have us believe to be their great and particular grievance. We have had upwards of 180 petitions before the Court, written on all possible subjects, from the tinkering of a cock and a crack in a horse's hoof; each thought worthy of the sign manual of royalty; but in the free indulgence of such correspondence they evidently unburthened their minds to their adopted sovereign, and were certainly not restrained by any delicacy of language or of feeling from venting their acerbity against their quondam European masters. We can find no trace of the original sin, no greasy stain staining these effusions of disinclination. How instructive is it that, among themselves, and when applying to us such language as 'dumbable hell-doomed infidels,' they apparently forget the fine they would have us believe they owe to nature and religion, and the perpetration of crimes at which humanity shudders. When with each other, and, as they conceived, safe from the intuitions and inquiries of British officers, that insurmountable obstacle to their fidelity and allegiance, the greased cartridge is apparently altogether lost sight of. Not a whisper is heard of a grievance which, if a substantial one, must ever have been uppermost in the memories of all; must have been continually rankling in their minds and embittering their thoughts; must have influenced them in their blood-thirstiness; and to themselves have been their only extenuation for crimes such as may well exclude them from mercy. What a contrast this to their speeches when uttered with a prospect of reaching European ears. Greased cartridges are then always brought forward; the use of them forms the one continuous nightmare of the sepoys' existence. Really, if we reflect seriously on this—if we remember that in reality there was not a single greased cartridge among either of the three regiments which first broke out into mutiny, murdering not only men, but inflicting wounds on women and children, and that we are not perfectly aware of this; when we call to mind that, even if greased cartridges had existed, and the use of them been required at the hands of these miscreants, not one of the Mahomedans at any rate, could possibly have been injured thereby in any caste prejudice, or placed even in temporary difficulty with regard to his religious tenets, when to this we add, what is well known to every one in India, whether Hindu, Mahomedan, or European, viz, that the native soldier has but to ask for his discharge, and that instance of peace it is at once granted to him, without inquiry or difficulty of any kind, it seems beyond the bounds of reason to imagine that these men were drawn into acts of such revolting atrocity by any grievance either real or imagined. Let the chimera, the disturbed dreams of fanaticism, of wickedness, or of folly have been what they may; let the instigations to evil have been as insidious as possible, and then allow that the sepoys to have been worked upon were as credulous as the greatest ignorance could make them, still, if the greased cartridge had been the only weapon the mutineers had to work with, but the one means ofUttering their aversion in their quiver, how easy was the remedy. It required no depth of knowledge, no philosopher to inform them that they could at once escape from every possible perplexity by simply applying for their discharge. I know not, gentlemen, what conclusion you may arrive at on this much vexed question; but, after pondering it in every way in which I can reason, I have presented it to me, I am obliged to infer that something deeper and more powerful than the use of greased cartridges has been at work.

The machinery that has set in motion such an amount of mutiny and murder, that has made its vibrations felt almost at one and the same moment from one end of India to the other, must have been prepared, if not with foreknowledge, yet with awful craft, and most successful and commanding subtlety. We must recollect, too, in considering this subject, that in many of the places where the native troops have risen against their European officers, there was no pretext even in reference to cartridges at all. Numbers of these mutinied, apparently, because they thought there was a favourable opportunity of doing so; because they were a hundred to one against those in authority, and fancied that they might pillage, plunder and massacre, not only with impunity, but with advantage. Is it possible that such fearful results as these could have at once developed themselves had the native army, previous to the cartridge question, been in a sound and well affected state?

Can any one imagine that the rancorous wide-spread enmity, of which we have lately had such terrible proofs, has been the result of feelings suddenly and accidentally irritated? Does it appear consistent with the natural order of events, that such intense malignity should start into the provocation? Or can it be reconciled with the instincts, the traditions, or the idiosyncrasies of the Hindus, that they should, recklessly, without inquiry, and without thought, desire to imbrue their hands in human blood, casting aside the pecuniary and other advantages that bound them to the cause of order and of the Government? Or, more than this, can it be imagined that the three regiments at Meerut, even when joined by those at Delhi, could have conceived an idea so daring as that of overthrowing, by themselves, the British Government in India?

I think, gentlemen, every one must allow that if we had no other evidence of a plot, no testimony indicative of a previous conspiracy, the very nature of the outbreak itself must have convinced us of the existence of one. In the moral, as in the physical world, there must be cause and effect; and the horrible butcheries of the past year would remain an anomaly and a mystery for ever, could we trace them to nothing more occult and baneful than a cartridge of any kind. It will be observed, that this point of the cartridges, so openly and frequently insisted on, at Meerut and elsewhere, before the 10th of May, gradually becomes more and more indistinct as the plot gathers strength and matures itself, and after furnishing the mutineers with their first war cry at Delhi, it seems to have answered its purpose, and henceforward was allowed to sink into disuse and neglect. With little or no vitality at starting, it soon died a natural death, and was succeeded by a reality of purpose, and a fixedness of resolve, that would have been worthy of a better cause. If we review the actions and whole conduct of these mutineers, we shall soon see that, from the very commencement, they bear the impress of cunning and of secret combination. For instance, 85 of their comrades were ironed before them and sent off to jail in their presence on the morning of the 9th of May; but this occasioned no outbreak of fury. Not a sound or token of dissatisfaction escaped from the men, who, then and long before, must have had rebellion in their hearts; no gesture indicative of sympathy with the culprits was exhibited by any; in fact, as far as appearances could be trusted, the infantry regiments at Meerut, and the remaining portion of the 3rd Cavalry, were as absent in love as they could possibly be desired; and this deception was successfully resorted to till their plans were matured, and the moment for open revolt had arrived. The night of the 9th of May, twelve hours after the imprisonment of the 3rd Cavalry mutineers had taken place, was as favourable an opportunity as the night following, for a march upon the nearest magazine; but there had not then been time for preparing the Delhi sepoyos for a movement which the progress of events at Meerut had doubtless precipitated sooner than their first calculations had led them to expect. Hence the necessity for communicating a fresh with Delhi, and acquainting the sepoyos there with the drama that was to be enacted on Monday the 11th. Such work was done by the evidence of Captain Tyler; for it would be difficult to assign any other motive for a carriage full of sepoyos coming over from Meerut on Sunday evening, and driving straight into the lines of the 38th Native Infantry.

Again, we can perceive, in the very hour chosen for the outbreak at Meerut, the same evidence of the plan, too, of the Meerut mutineers. The plans, too, are considera

the very serious nature of the outbreak had time to develop itself, than his own special servants—in the very precincts of his palace—and almost, as it were, before his own eyes, rush to imbue their hands in the blood of every European they can meet with; and, when we remember that two of these were young and delicate women who could have given no no offense; whose sex and age might have tamed any hearts less pitiless than those of the human demons who destroyed them, we are able to realize something of the horribly unnatural influences that appear innate to Mahomedan treachery. How otherwise was it possible that education, the pride of royal ancestry, a life of tranquil ease and comparative refinement, should not have exempted this old and grey-headed man from all connexion with deeds which seem too barbarous for the very outcast of humanity, or even for the untamed but less savage denizens of the jungle.
We shall have proved in this court, and will be repeated in after years, that the last king of the imperial house of Taimur was an accomplice in this villainy. The circumstances shall now be fairly stated. These murders were comitted in the broad glare of day, before dozens of witnesses, and without the slightest attempt at concealment.
They were perpetrated, as has been already stated, by the prisoner's own retainers, and within the limits of his palace, where, be it remembered even under the Company's Government, his jurisdiction was paramount. I shall not, however, attempt to infer that these murders must have been previously sanctioned by the prisoner; mere inference in such a point cannot be accepted in a court of justice. I prefer to quote from the progress. It is Ahsan Ulla Khan, the physician, who is speaking, and who says, that at the time referred to, he and Ghulum Abbas, the attorney in court, were with the king, when it was told them that the troopers had killed Mr. Fraser, and had gone up to Captain Douglas to kill him, and that this was instantly confirmed by the return of the policeman, who told them that they had witnessed Mr. Fraser's murder; that his body was in the gateway, and that the troopers had ascended to the upper storey for the purpose of murdering those there. Why the witness suppresses all mention of the prominent part the king's own servants took in these massacres can easily be imagined.
In a subsequent part of his examination, he even asserts that he never heard that any of the king's servants joined in these murders, may more, that it was not generally known who committed them. Such is the evasion of the king's own physician, who doubtless was aware of the importance that would necessarily attach to this point. It was not generally known who committed these murders, and yet, at this lap-s- of time, we have had no difficulty in tracing the individuals, and ascertaining their names. It was not generally known that the king's own servants were the murderers, and yet we find this very circumstance prominently and specifically mentioned at the time in the newspapers of the city. I need not, after this, recapitulate the evidence of all those who have clearly and satisfactorily proved that the king's servants were the murderers; for their testimony stands unshaken and unrefuted. It will simply suffice if I quote the statement of one of them, and which is as follows: "At this time Mr. Fraser remained below trying to suppress the disturbance, and while thus engaged, I noticed that Hajji, lapdary, cut him down with a tulvar, and almost at the same instant, some of the king's servants cut at him with swords till he was dead. One of Mr. Fraser's murderers was an Abyssinian. After this they made a rush to the upper apartments, when I immediately ran round by another door and closed the door at the top of the stairs. I was engaged in shutting all the doors, when the crowd found entrance by the southern stair, and having forced one of the doors on that side, came and gave admission to the men who had assisted in murdering Mr. Fraser. These immediately rushed into the apartments where the gentlemen, viz., Captain Douglas, Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Jennings, had retired, and attacking them with swords, at once murdered them and the two young ladies. On the floor below, I was seized by one of the police, a bearer in the service of the king, who said, 'Tell me where Captn. Douglas is; you have concealed him.' He forced me upstairs with him; I said, 'You have yourselves killed all the gentlemen already;' but on reaching the room where Captain Douglas was, I saw that he was not quite dead. Mundoh perceiving this also, hit him with a bludgeon on the forehead, and killed him immediately." Having now established that the murderers of these ladies were the special servants of the prisoner, it will be well to revert to the testimony of the physician, Ahsan Ulla Khan, and to ascertain from him the steps the prisoner took on the murders being reported to him. The only order he gave on this occasion appears to have been to close the gates of his palace; and we naturally inquire whether this was for the purpose of preventing the escape of the murderers.
The evidence distinctly proves that it was not. The physician being further interrogated, is obliged to confess that the prisoner took no steps whatever either to discover, to secure, or to punish the guilty, and attributes it to there being much confusion at the time; but if the king's authority had actually been set aside, and by his own servants too, this would have been the most forcible of all reasons for immediately re-establishing it, by at once bringing the offenders to justice. That this was not done we have been already informed, and we can only account for it on the supposition that these acts of the prisoner's servants, if not instigated by himself, had yet actually anticipated his wishes. We are thus perfectly prepared for what is to follow, viz., that no servant was ever dismissed, and not the slightest investigation or inquiry was ever instituted; in fact, in the words of the question put to the witness, the king continued these murderers both in his favor and in employment, and this too, as we have seen, when the very newspapers of the day gave information against them. After this, is it necessary to question whether he adopted these deeds as his own or not? I need not quote what may be the law of the land on such a point, for there is a yet higher law which must acquit him or condemn him, the law of conscience and of sense; that law which every one who hears me can apply, and which carries with it a verdict more terrible than that which is pronounced in mere conformity to legal codes or military legislation: it is a law that does not depend upon local constitutions, upon human institutes, or religious creeds: it is a law fixed in the heart of man by his Maker; and can it now here be set aside?

Perhaps it may now be time to turn our attention to what was doing at the magazine, and to trace the further steps of the mutineers in that direction. Captain Forrest has told us that it was about 9 o'clock in the morning when the main body of the native troops from Meerut was passing over the bridge in military formation (that is, in subdivisions of companies), with fixed bayonets and sloped arms, the cavalry being in front. It was actually in less than one hour after this that a subadar of the 39th Native Infantry, who was commanding the magazine guard outside the gate, informed them that the King of Delhi had sent a guard to take possession of the magazine, and to bring all the Europeans there up to his palace, and that if they did not consent to this, none of them were to be allowed to leave the magazine. Captain Forrest adds that he did not see the guard at this time, but that he saw the man who had brought this message, and he was a well-dressed Mussulman. Nor was this all, for shortly after the above, a native officer in the king's service arrived with a strong guard of the king's own soldiers in their uniform, and told the above-mentioned subadar and the non-commissioned officers that he was sent down by the king to relieve them of duty.

We thus see with what alertness and despatch this most important object, the seizure of the magazine, was attempted. Is it, however, to be believed that such was the ready, immediate, and, as it were, impulsive decision of the king, or of those who formed the court? To attribute to them anything of this nature would be to give them credit for a coolness of calculation, combined with a quickness of apprehension, such as pertains only to the more gifted of mankind. The scope and entire progress of the scheme speak loudly of a plan previously arranged, and of deliberations long matured by the counsels of many. Indeed, it is difficult to conceive that any one, not previously initiated in the secret, could, on the moment, so promptly and so effectually have entered upon and adopted the details necessary for carrying it out. You will recollect the extreme importance of the decision, the magnitude of the interests at stake. You will call to mind the cogent reasons and the numerous arguments that would naturally array themselves against adopting so headlong and precipitate a measure. It was, in fact, an invitation to a king to leaguer himself with ruffians and with cut-throats. Any inducement or prospective advantage that they could hold out to him was faint and almost imperceptible, compared with the open risk which he was to encounter. By embarking in so forlorn a cause he imperilled every thing; his own life, and those of all belonging to him, and for what? The distant glimmer of a crown, which common reason, or the slightest consideration, would have convinced him was a mere ignis fatuus—a mockery of a sceptre, that would evade his grasp. Are we to imagine that it was under such circumstances that this weak and tremulous old man seized and improved his occasion, and with all the rapid instinct of determination directed his own troops upon the magazine, to establish himself there as the one point of primary and most vital importance; and this in the first moment of a surprise when nothing but riot and disorder reigned supreme? Or are we to suppose that there was a secret and a deeper knowledge of what the other portions of the army were already ripe for, and that the five or six regiments to commence with were but the instalments of those that were to follow? Or, if such previous understanding and collusion did not exist either with the king or any of those immediately about him, are we to attribute to superstition and the pretended revelation of dreams, circumstances which scarcely admit of satisfactory solution by any more sober process? We have all heard, in this court, of the vision of a hurricane that was to rise from the west with a great flood of water devastating the whole country, but bearing up on its surge this descendant of ancient royalty, and that this vision, as interpreted by Hasan Askari the priest, signified annihilation to the English invaders by the power of the King of Persia, who was to restore sovereignty to the heirs of the throne of Hindustan. Was it a reliance upon this that expedited the otherwise tardy movements of these Asiatics, and gave breath and boldness to their decisions? I am aware that under other circumstances, and in any but an eastern land, such unmeaning flights of a bewildered imagination would be too trivial to dwell upon, too unsubstantial for the gravity of comment; but here, in seriously considering the nature and progress of an extensive military revolt, they obtrude themselves on the mind as subjects capable of influencing for evil the destinies of thousands.

These observations have been elicited by the marked and unusual energy displayed in making the magazine the point of instant attack. It seems to me that such cannot be accounted for by conspiracy among the sepoys alone, for it was the king's own troops who were the first to seek possession, and the military and systematic way in which this was done betrays the authority by which the orders were issued. There was no confusion here, no attempt at pillage: non-commissioned officers were appointed to the separate guards for the different gates of the magazine, while another guard superintended the labourers who were removing the stores that happened to be outside. How could such decision, such instant transformation from chaos to system and to order have resulted had not the king or some of his officials been entrusted with a sort of programme of events? How, in fact, could the king's troops have been in readiness and preparation for such work without warning of some kind?

If I have not succeeded in tracing to the king himself a foreknowledge of the leading leading events that were to take place on Monday the 11th of May, I trust it has been made obvious that the secret was in the possession of some influential inmates of the palace. The babbling garrulity of the prince Jawan Bakht sufficiently indicates this, for such is his joy at the anticipation of murdering the English, that he is unable to restrain his expressions of it. My chief object, however, has been to render clear what I believe to be the truth, viz., that the conspiracy, from the very commencement, was not confined, and did not even originate with them, but had its ramifications throughout the palace and the city: and do not the murders which we have already adverted to tend to corroborate this fact? We have evidence that the mutineers of the 11th and 20th Regiments of Native Infantry, before the magazine was exploded, proceeded to attack and escalate it, and it is then for the first time that we find the king, through his troops, acting in open alliance with these traitors to their government. From that moment there is no further disguise, and no attempt at concealment. Fairly launched into the stream of sedition, he is hurried onward by the swollen flood, which was however to bear him, as he imagined, to the throne of Hindustan, but to leave him in its ebb a mere helpless wreck upon the sands.

I would here pause for a second, to refer to Lieutenant Willoughby, and to the brave men under him, who for so long a time held, against unnumbered odds, the magazine entrusted to them. One hardly knows which to admire most, the penetration and sagacity which, at a glance, foresaw the possible necessity for its destruction, and made arrangements accordingly; or the undaunted resolution with which the final sacrifice was accomplished. To do justice to such heroism will be the pleasing duty of the historian. I can merely give it a passing notice, having to dilate on other matters more immediately connected with the proceedings before us.

With the explosion of the magazine at Delhi, every hope of stemming the torrent of rebellion seems to have vanished; resistance had been there protracted to its utmost possible extent; the sacrifice was a final one; and the following day the speculating community, if, in isolated spots, still preserving the appearance of Government authority, were left without one vestige of real power, so that it soon became a duty to the state and to themselves to save their lives by a timely retreat. Delhi was consequently abandoned to the miscreants who had in the short space of 24 hours stained themselves with crimes which can scarcely be equalled in all the catalogues of bygone iniquity. It is now that we find the king coming personally forward as the chief actor in that great drama which had more than England or Europe for its spectators, the progress of which was watched with such absorbing interest everywhere by the antagonistic powers of civilization and of barbarism. The evidence shows that on the afternoon of the 11th of May, the king, having entered the hall of special audience, seated himself in a chair, when the soldiery, officers and all, came forward one by one and bowed their heads before him, asking him to place his hands on them. The king did so, and each then withdrew, saying whatever came into his mind. The witness, viz., Ghulam Abbas, the prisoner's attorney in court, informs us that this ceremony of the king putting his hands on the heads of the soldiery was equivalent to accepting their allegiance and services; and he further states, that though he is not aware of any regular proclamation having been made in Delhi in reference to the king assuming the reins of government, yet that such may have been done without his hearing of it; but that on the very day of the outbreak the king's authority was established, and that night a royal salute was fired of about 21 guns.

These matters bring us to the charges against the prisoner, and it may perhaps be as well now to consider them, not so much in regard to dates as the sequence in which they have been drawn up. The first charge against Muhammad Bahadur Shah, ex-king of Delhi, is: “For that he, being a pensioner of the British Government in India, did, at Delhi, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, encourage, aid, and abet Muhammad Bakht Khan, subadar of the regiment of artillery, and divers others, native commissioned officers and soldiers unknown, of the East India Company's Army, in the crimes of mutiny and rebellion against the State.” I am not going to weary the court by repeating even a tenth part of the evidence which has been brought forward to establish these charges, but it is perhaps necessary to show that proof of them has been recorded. Mr. Saunders, Ongoing Commissioner and Agent to the Lieutenant-governor, has examined under what circumstances the prisoner became a pensioner of the British Government in India, viz., that his grandfather, Shah Alam, after having been kept in rigorous confinement by the Maharrattas, on their defeat by the English in 1803, applied to the British Government for protection. This was accorded, and from that moment the titular Kings of Delhi became pensioned subjects of the British. It will be seen, then, that, as far as this family is concerned, there was no wrong to be complained of, and nothing but benefits to be remembered. The prisoner's grandfather Shah Alam had not only lost his throne, but had his eyes put out, and been subjected to every species of indignity, and was still kept in most rigorous confinement, when the English arrived. He had then appeared as his deliverers, and, with generous sympathy for his misfortunes, bestowed on him rank and pension which, continued to his successors, have maintained them in honour and in influence, till, like the snake in the fable, they have turned their fangs upon those to whom they owed the very means of their existence. The evidence that connects the prisoner with Muhammad Bakht Khan, subadar of the artillery, and which of itself will be sufficient to establish the charge, is a document from beginning to end in the prisoner's own handwriting:
EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE THE COURT APPOINTED

"To the Especial Slave, the Lord Governor, Muhammad Bakht Khan Bahadur.

"Receive our favour, and understand that whilst the Neemuch force have reached Alapur, its baggage is still here, and that you are therefore directed to take 200 troopers and five or seven companies of infantry, and have all the baggage alluded to, such as tents, &c., together with commissariat supplies, conveyed by the gharis to Alapur. You are further directed not to allow the infidels staying near the Edgalt to advance. Be it known to you further, that if the army returns without victory, and divested of its appliances of war, the consequence must be disastrous. You have been premonished, and you are to consider these orders stringent."

It is true there is no date to this communication, but the allusions in it leave no possible doubt as to its having been written within the period embraced by the terms of the first charge.

Perhaps this will be the best place for the few observations I have to offer on the defence. The prisoner, like every other that we have tried, has, according to his own showing, been the mere victim of circumstances; declares that he had no intelligence on the subject previous to the outbreak; that the mutinous soldiery surrounded him completely, and placed sentries on all sides; and that, fearing for his life, he kept quiet, and went to his own private apartments; that the mutinous soldiery kept the men, women, and children prisoners; that he twice saved their lives by entreaty and persuasion, and that the third time he did all in his power to save them, but that the rebellious soldiery would not heed him, and eventually carried out their purpose of slaying these poor people against his orders. Now the chief objection to all this is, that it is not only unsupported by evidence, but is directly in the teeth of all the testimony, whether oral or written, and whether given by his own servants or by others. The entire defence indeed is a mere tissue of denials of guilt; assertions of his not having been a free agent; and an endeavour to put the onus of his misconduct upon others. He cannot challenge the authenticity of the documents against him, or the evidence of his own handwriting, or his own seal, and his only expedient consists in assevering, that what he wrote was by compulsion, and that his seal was affixed in the same way. The only dilemma that he appears unable to extricate himself from, to his own satisfaction, in this way, is the going out to Humayun's tomb, and coming in again. It was, of course, necessary to state that the last was by his own choice and free will; and this would scarcely have been possible had his going out been represented as compulsory; for if the sepoys had forcibly taken him out, they would hardly allow him voluntarily to return, so we are treated with the following curious account: "When the revolted and rebellious troops prepared to abscond, finding an opportunity, I got away secretly under the palace windows, and went and stayed in Humayun's mausoleum." One would have thought that if he wished to separate himself from the rebellious troops, that his best plan would have been to have stayed in Delhi, when they were preparing to abscond, instead of secretly planning to go out with them. However, I do not mean to take the defence, paragraph by paragraph, by paragraph, and thus refute it. My best reply to it, I believe, will be by showing how fully and completely the charges have been proved, and to this task I now again address myself, and proceed to the consideration of the second count, which is, if possible, still more fully established than the first. It runs as follows:—"For having at Delhi, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, encouraged, aided and abetted Mirza Moghal, his own son, a subject of the British Government in India, and divers others unknown, inhabitants of Delhi, and of the North-West Provinces of India, also subjects of the said British Government, to rebel and wage war against the State." The documents and other evidence in support of this charge are so numerous that it would be tedious even to reckon them. The newspapers speak of the appointment of Mirza Moghal to the office of commander-in-chief; of his investiture with a dress of honour; and other matters relating thereto. The oral testimony is very strong on the same subject, while the discovered correspondence shows that Mirza Moghal, the son, was perhaps, next to his father, the leading chief of the rebels in Delhi. I shall for form's sake give a short extract from a petition of Moulay Muhammad Zohur Ali, police officer of Najaf Garh. It is as follows:—

"To the King! Shelter of the World!

"Respectfully sheweth,—That the orders of the royal missive have been fully explained to all the Thakurs, Chowdaries, Kanungos, and Patwaries of this township of Najaf Garh, and that the best arrangements have been established. Further, that, agreeably to your Majesty's injunctions, steps are being taken to collect horsemen and footmen, and it is explained to them, that their allowances will be paid from the revenue of this division of the district. Your slave's assurances on this point, however, will not be believed till some Ghuzis, recently engaged, shall have arrived. As regards Naib, Karkowla, Dechoo Kollan and other adjacent villages, your slave has to represent that, unrestrained by the dread of consequences, and bent on all sorts of excesses, the inhabitants have commenced plundering travellers."

This might, I think, be sufficiently conclusive as to the words of the charge in reference to "aiding and abetting in rebellion Mirza Moghal, his own son, and divers other unknown inhabitants of Delhi, and of the North-Western Provinces of India," insomuch as the petition from which I am quoting bears the autograph order of the prisoner referring it it to his son Mirza Moghal, and directing him quickly to send a regiment of infantry with its officers to Najaf Garh, in accordance with the wishes, and for the purpose of avenging the schemes of raising horsemen and those who may again sting the English. But there is another petition, which has not yet been submitted to the court, having only lately come to hand, and which may appropriately be introduced here. It is from Amir Ali Khan, son of the Nawab of Khurajpura, and is dated 12th of July. It runs as follows:

"To the King! Shelter of the World!

"Respectfully showeth.—That your petitioner has come to your royal court, at which Darius might have served as a doorkeeper, having left his house animated by the ambition to stake his life in your Majesty's cause, and laments that he has lived to see the day when the accursed English have presumed to direct their cannon against your royal dwelling, the guardians of which are the angels of heaven. From the first dawn of the powers of discernment, your petitioner has been trained, like the lion, to conflicts and war, and has not, like the fox, been concerned for his life—

"Leopards destroy their prey on the summits of mountains, "Crocodiles devour theirs on the banks of rivers.

"Your petitioner submits that if his prayer is accepted, and the plans and stratagems necessary in this war are entrusted to his judgment, aided by your Majesty's august auspices, he will, in three days, totally exterminate these people with white skins and dark fortunes. It was necessary, and I have therefore submitted it. (Prayers for the prosperity of the army and filthy language against them who wish it harm). Petition of the slave Amir Ali Khan, son of Nawab Dullah Khan, son of Nawab Najabat Khan, chief of Khurajpura.

"Autograph Order of the King, in Pencil.

"Mirza Zohuruddin will make inquiries, and will give the petitioner service."

The third charge is—"For that he, being a subject of the British Government in India, and not regarding the duty of his allegiance, did, at Delhi, on the 11th May 1857, or thereabouts, as a false traitor against the State, proclaim and declare himself the reigning King and Sovereign of India, and did, then and there, traitorously seize and take unlawful possession of the city of Delhi; and did moreover, at various times between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, as such false traitor aforesaid, unreasonably conspire, consult, and agree with Mirza Moghal, his own son, and with Muhammad Bakht Khan, subadar of the regiment of artillery, and divers other false traitors unknown, to raise, levy, and make insurrection, rebellion, and war against the State; and further to fulfill and perfect his treasonable design of overthrowing and destroying the British Government in India, did assemble armed forces at Delhi, and send them forth to fight and wage war against the said British Government."

That the prisoner was a pensioned subject of the British Government in India has been already shown in treating of the first charge; and as the British Government neither deprived him nor any member of his family of any sovereignty whatever, but, on the contrary, relieving them from misery and oppression, bestowed on them largesses and pensions aggregating many millions of pounds sterling, the duty of their allegiance will, I think, be readily admitted; yet, as we have already seen, this traitor rushes to seize the first possible opportunity of overthrowing and destroying the government of his benefactors. On the afternoon of the very first day of the outbreak, in the hall of special audience, he receives the obeisances of the revolted sepoys, and by laying his hands on their heads unites with them in a common brotherhood of infancy. It is perhaps difficult to realise such a scene. An enfeebled tremulous old man striving with palsied hand to reach a sceptre far too powerful for his puny grasp, and while bent by age and infirmity, inducting a monarch's garb, to give, as it were, a benison and a blessing to the cause of the foulest treachery and murder! Dead to every feeling that falls honorably on the heart of man, this shrivelled impersonation of malignity must have formed no inapt centrepiece to the group of ruffians that surrounded him!

There are several witnesses who speak to the circumstance of the prisoner having been proclaimed. It is variously stated as occurring on different days, and it is more probable that such was actually the case. One or two proclamations would hardly be sufficient to carry the information through all the suburbs of so large a city as Delhi. The prisoner's attorney allows that the King's authority was established on the 11th of May; and Gulab, messenger, being asked, "Was the King proclaimed as the reigning sovereign immediately after the outbreak?" answered, "Yes, the proclamation was made by beat of drum on the very day of the outbreak, about three in the afternoon, to the effect that it was now the King's Government;" while Chhan, pedlar, another witness, declares that, "On the 11th of May, about midnight, some 20 guns were fired in the palace. I heard the reports at my house; and next day, at about noon, a proclamation was made by beat of drum that the country had reverted to the possession of the King." The next paragraph in the charge is in reference to traitorously seizing and taking unlawful possession of the city of Delhi; but this is a point that I need not quote evidence to establish. It is difficult to turn our eyes in any direction without having convincing proofs of it. The charge then..." goes on to assert that the prisoner "did at various times, between the 10th of May and 1st of October 1857, treasonably conspire, consult, and agree with Mirza Moghal his son, and with Muhammad Bakht Khan, subordinate of the regiment of artillery, and divers other false traitors unknown, to raise, levy, and make insurrection and war against the State." Mirza Moghal being lately appointed commander-in-chief, and a grand procession in honour of his being so took place a few days after the outbreak. The witness deposes to this is Chunli Lal, pedlar; but he is unable to specify the exact date on which he witnessed it. Mirza Moghal's authority after this seems to have been uncontrolled, at any rate in all matters immediately relating to the army, until Subadar Bakht Khan, of the artillery, arrived, and was appointed both lord governor-general and commander-in-chief. The date of his arrival was the 1st of July, and after that some jealousy and clinging of authority by the two commanders-in-chief is observable for, on the 17th of July, Mirza Moghal writes and informs his father, that on that day he had formed up the army and taken it outside the city to attack the English, when General Bakht Khan interfered, and for a long time kept the whole force standing inactive, wanting to know by whose orders it had gone out, and, saying it was not to proceed without his permission, caused it to return. Mirza Moghal adds, "that having his orders reversed cannot but cause vexation to any officer, high or low, and begs that definite instructions may be given as to whom the real authority over the army belongs." There is no order on this letter, nor have we any intimation what decision was come to, but that some better arrangement was the consequence is evident, for, on the very next day, the 18th of July, we find Mirza Moghal and General Bakht Khan acting in concert, as the following letter from Mirza Moghal to his father will show. It is dated the 19th of July, and runs as follows:—"Since yesterday the arrangements have been completed for carrying on active offensive operations both by night and day. If it could be afforded from the direct route to Alapur, with divine blessing, and through the influence of Your Majesty's ever-during prestige, a final and decisive victory, it is to be expected, would soon be obtained. I therefore pray that positive orders may be issued from the throne to the Bareilly general to afford the aid in question; that is, that he be directed to proceed with troops to Alapur, and to make an attack on the infidels from that direction, while your slave, with his division of the army, makes another on this side, so that the two forces co-operating in the field, may in one or two days consign all the damnable hell-doomed infidels to hell. Moreover, it is to be expected that the force going to Alapur will cut off the enemies' supplies. It was necessary, and has therefore been submitted." On this letter there is an autograph order of the King to the following effect: "That Mirza Moghal will make whatever arrangements may be proper;" and also an order, apparently by Mirza Moghal,"—"That an order be written to the Bareilly general." I think this is conclusive of the three conspiring, consulting, and agreeing together; but it may be as well to enter here two documents which have not as yet been submitted to the court. One is a proclamation from General Muhammad Bakht Khan, dated 12th of July, and is to the following effect. It has, I should observe, been extracted from the "Delhi Urdu News":—"Let it be generally known to the persons living in the city and the country, such as chiefs of freehold, pensioners, landholders of rent-free estates, &c., that if, from anxiety for their incomes, they have hitherto continued on the side of the English, and have in any way indulged themselves in furnishing them with supplies, their having done so will not be considered inexcusable. It is accordingly now proclaimed, that all those who have been alluded to, are to cherish full confidence that when final and complete victory shall have been obtained, provided their title-deeds, former and recent, shall on inspection be fully verified, they will have the present provisions in their favour continued to them, and that they will also receive compensation in full for the entire period during which their incomes may have been suspended, owing to the present disturbances; but if, after receiving knowledge of these orders, any person shall, notwithstanding, forward intelligence or furnish supplies, &c., to the English, he will be severely punished in the way Government may determine. The chief police officer of the city is, therefore, ordered to have the signatures of all chiefs of freeholds, of rent-free estates, and pensioners residing in his jurisdiction, written on the reverse of this notification to them in this matter, in acknowledgment of their having been duly informed, and then to send the notification immediately to his Excellency." The other document is an order from the King, dated the 6th of September 1857, and is addressed to the chief police officer of the city. It runs as follows:—"You are directed to have proclaimed throughout the city by beat of drum, that this is a religious war, and is being prosecuted on account of the faith, and that it behoves all Hindu and Mussulman residents of the imperial city, or of the villages out in the country, as well as those natives of Hindustan who are arrayed against us on the ridge, or are any where employed on the side of the English, whether they be men of the English, whether they be Hindus or Sikhs, or foreigners, or natives of the Himalya Hills, or Nepalese, to continue true to their faith and creeds, and to slay the English and their servants, and you are directed to have it further proclaimed, that those who are now present with the English force on the ridge, whether they be people of Hindustan, or foreigners, or hillmen, or Sikhs, or whatever country they may be natives of, or whether they be Mahommedans, or Hindus born in Hindustan, they are not to entertain any fears or dread of the enemy. Whenever they come over to this our side, we will make for them to join in the attacks on the enemy, whether they be or be not servants, will be allowed to keep themselves whatever property they may take from the English in plunder, and that they will beside receive additional rewards from his Majesty, and will be amply provided for." This paper, which I have just perused, is an office copy, and was found recently among other documents in the office of the King's chief police station. It bears the seal of that office, and is actually attested as a true copy by the signature of Bhas Singh, assistant to the King's chief police officer. A more trustworthy and convincing document could hardly be laid before a court. It seems to me fully to complete the proof of the third charge, and to render further quotation from the numerous other documents unnecessary. It also tends to establish the latter portion of the fourth charge.

To this charge I will now turn my attention. It accuses the prisoner "of having, at Delhi, on the 16th of May 1857, or thereabouts, within the precincts of the palace at Delhi, feloniously caused and become accessory to the murder of 49 persons, chiefly women and children of European and mixed European descent." As far as the murder of these poor victims is concerned, I have nothing to allege; the facts have been detailed before the court in all their horrid minuteness, and they are not such as to be easily forgotten. The coldblooded, hardened villainy that could revel in leading women and young children to the shambles, and this, too, without the miserable apology of imagined wrong, or to the mistaken zeal of religious frenzy, is something so inhuman that the mind might well refuse to accept it as truth, did not all the force of concurrent ideas, of direct testimony, of circumstantial proof, and elsewhere repeated rejections of the same dreadful tragedies, enforce it upon our convictions. It is not then such admitted facts as the above that I am here called upon to establish. They are unhappily but too prominently and painfully shaped forth to require further illustrations. It remains, however, to show how deeply the prisoner stands implicated in this revolting butchery, and whether, as averred in the indictment, he did "feloniously cause and become accessory to the murder of these 49 persons." I shall not, in so doing, attempt to avail myself of that law which makes all persons joining in insurrection and sedition individually responsible for every act of violence that may be committed by those with whom they stand leagued in illicit combination, even though such acts may have been against their wishes or without their cognizance. I mean, however, separately to consider each fact connecting the prisoner with the deaths of these women and children. I will revert to the evidence of their capture, the place of their imprisonment, the fearful privations to which they were subjected, and the more than cruel treatment which they experienced from the commencement of their confinement, all of which were but too prophetic of the ultimate doom that awaited them. The first person whose testimony I shall have to quote is Ahsan Ulla Khan, the physician, when asked, "How was it that so many English women and children were brought to the palace and placed in confinement?" he replied—"The mutineers took them in and about the city, and having established their own quarters in the palace, they brought their prisoners in with them too." Being further interrogated, he declares that the mutineers did not retain the custody of their prisoners, but, as each successive one was brought in, reported the circumstance to the prisoner, and were told to take the Europeans to the kitchen, and keep them confined there. Being again questioned, he asserts that the King himself appointed the kitchen as the place of their confinement, and observed at the time that it was a large capacious building; so that it appears that the prisoner not only fixed upon the building himself as the place for herding indiscriminately together, men, women, and children, but from its being in his own palace, and from his volunteering a description of it, it is evident that he had some personal knowledge of what it was like. He terms it a large capacious building, but those are not very definite terms, and when used in reference to different objects may relatively have widely different meanings. To obviate any misconception on such a point, I have, since Ahsan Ulla Khan gave this evidence, visited the place myself, and taken its measurements and description. The building is 40 feet long, 12 broad, and about 10 high. It is old, dirty, and dilapidated, and without the vestige of plaster; but it is worse than this, for it is dark, has no made flooring, no windows, and is entirely without the means of ventilation or of light. There is but one aperture to it, a miserable, small wooden door; but I will now let Mrs. Aldwell describe it in her own words:—"We were all confined in one room, very dark, with only one door, and no windows or other opening. It was not fit for the residence of any human being, much less for the number of us that were there. We were very much crowded together, and in consequence of the sepoys, and every one who took a fancy to do so, coming and frightening the children, we were obliged frequently to close the one door that we had, which thus left us without light or air. The sepoys used to come with their muskets loaded, and bayonets fixed, and ask us whether we would consent to become Mahommedans and also slaves, if the King granted us our lives; but the King's special armed retainers, from whom the guard over us was always furnished, refused the sepoys to be content with nothing short of our lives, saying we should be cut up in small pieces, and given as food to the kites and crows. We were very indifferently fed, but on two occasions the King sent us better food." Such was the return made by this traitor for the millions of pounds sterling bestowed by the English on himself and on his family! Having, as one of the witnesses has specifically stated, "abundance of room where these English women and children would have been safe in the apartments occupied by the females of his own establishment," where, it is said, "there are secret recesses in which 500 people might be concealed, and where, even had the rebels dared to violate the sanctity of the zenana, all search would have been fruitless;" and there being, according to another witness, no scarcity of vacant buildings in the palace in which the ladies and children could have been kept in confinement, and in which they might have had every comfort; this minion of English generally preferred to select for them the very den set apart for culprits and for felons, and where they even received far worse than a felon's treatment, for they were crowded crowded into a small space, and were daily exposed to the insults and cruelty of all who chose to molest them. Such was the requital to the English for a princely pension and an imperial palace, as will be observed from the statements of Aisam Ullah Khan and Mrs. Addie, that both agree in attributing these measures personally to the King; and when we recollect the trifling matters which were, on every occasion, referred to him, and which, as has been fully demonstrated in this court, received not only his attention but were endorsed by his own autograph instructions, is there any room left for doubt, that the more important concerns were under his special control also? Indeed, the concurrent testimony of many witnesses, and the irrefutable evidence of his own handwriting, incontrovertibly prove that the King's special armed retainers were always on guard over the prisoners; that it is the King who supplies them with their very indifferent food, and on two occasions sends them some of better quality; and thus, too, the sepoys asked them whether they would consent to become Mahomedans and slaves if the King granted them their lives; and who, on perusing even thus much of the evidence, can doubt that he had the power of doing so? Has there been one single circumstance elicited that shows that the prisoner even wished to save them, or that he even extended to them one act of common courtesy or kindness? Very far from it; for whilst no check was given to those who showed the prisoners every species of unmanly brutality, the ordinary charity of giving food and water to a Christian was severely punished, and a Mahomedan woman, simply on this account, was actually immured with the prisoners. Can the bitterness of rancour go further than this? Or is it possible to contemplate the place and nature of the confinement fixed for these felons? Women and children are shut out. The conclusion that a cruel death was from the first moment reserved for them, and that, in the words of the witness, Mukund Lal, "they were but being collected." Indeed the edge of the sword seems to have been but a merciful deliverance from the lingering death which confinement in so loathsome a den, at such a season of the year, must eventually have inflicted on all exposed to it.

Might I not here stop, and confidently, on this point, await the decision of the court against the prisoner? The proof, however, swells in volume as it proceeds, and I mean to leave no portion of it untraced. Gulab, a charporey or messenger, has distinctly stated that a couple of days before the massacre took place, it was known that the Europeans would be killed in two days, and that on the day fixed for the slaughter arriving, great crowds of people were flocking to the palace. Every witness to the scene who has spoken of it in court has alluded to the crowds assembled, both as spectators and actors, on the morning in question; and as this was at the early hour of between eight and nine, there seems no doubt that previous information of what was to take place must have been given. Nothing indicates that an outburst of fury, either on the part of the populace or military, in any way led to a catastrophe so awful. On the contrary, the witness distinctly says that without orders it could not have happened, and that there were but two sources from which such an order could have emanated, viz., the King and his son, Mirza Moghal, adding, that he does not know from which of them gave the order. He, however, distinctly states that he was present at the massacre of these European prisoners, and that he saw them all standing together, surrounded on all sides by the King's special armed retainers, or what you may term his body-guard, and some of the infantry mutineers; and that though he did not observe any signal or order given, yet, on a sudden, the men just mentioned drew their swords, simultaneously attacked the prisoners, and continued cutting at them till they had killed them all. A second witness, viz., Chuni Lal, the newswriter, when asked by whose orders these Europeans were murdered, distinctly replies, that "it was done by the King's order; who else could have given such an order?" He and other witnesses concur in stating that Mirza Moghal, the King's son, from the top of his house which overlooked the court-yard, was a spectator on this occasion; this Mirza Moghal being at that time second only to the King himself in authority. Is it credible, then, under such circumstances, that the King's own body-guard, his special armed retainers, could have dared to perpetrate this frightful butchery without his order, and against his wishes? If a doubt could be entertained on such a subject, I would, I think, be speedily dissipated on a perusal of the writings evidently approved by the prisoner, in which bloodthirstiness and sanguinary ferocity against the English are so glaringly conspicuous. In reference to the presence of Mirza Moghal, and in further proof that it was by the King's own orders that these unhappy women and children were massacred, I shall quote the testimony of the King's own secretary, Mukund Lal. To the question, "By whose order were the ladies and children that were prisoners in the palace murdered?" he replies, "These people were being collected for three days; on the fourth day, the infantry and cavalry soldiers, accompanied by Mirza Moghal, came to the entrance of the King's private apartments, and requested the King's permission to kill them. The King was, at this time, in his own apartments. Mirza Moghal and Basant Ali Khan went inside, while the soldiers remained without. They returned in about 20 minutes, when Basant Ali Khan publicly, and in a loud voice, proclaimed that the King had given his permission for the slaughter of the prisoners, and that they could take them away. Accordingly, the King's armed retainers, in whose custody the prisoners had been, took them from the place of confinement, sold the mutinous soldiers, killed them." It appears, then, that Mirza Moghal had just come from the prisoner's presence, and was armed with his authority for carrying out this most hideous deed of blood. It may seem almost superfluous to add anything to the above; but the proof furnished by the extract from the prisoner's diary is so important and convincing that I feel bound to quote it. The evidence of the physician, Aisam Ullah Khan, Khan, regarding it, is as follows: "Was a Court diary of occurrences at the palace kept by order of the King during the rebellion?"—Answer. "The Court diary was kept up as usual, according to the custom which had long preceded the outbreak." Question. "Look at this leaf, and see whether you can recognise the handwriting on it?"—Answer. "Yes; it is in the handwriting of the man who kept the Court diary, and this leaf is a portion of it."

Translation of an Extract from the Court Diary, for the 18th of May 1857.

"The King held his Court in the Hall of Special Audience: 49 English were prisoners; and the army demanded that they should be given over to them for slaughter. The King delivered them up, saying, 'The army may do as they please;' and the prisoners were consequently put to the sword. There was a large attendance; and all the chiefs, nobles, officers, and writers presented themselves at Court, and had the honour of paying their respects."

Here, then, we have oral as well as most unimpeachable written testimony, all converging on this point, and it would seem nearly impossible to make the proof clearer, here we not the prisoner's written confession of the crime. I do not mean in his defence, which is simply a document framed for this Court, and is but a mere tissue of false denials, without any effort at refuting what stands so prominently against him. I allude, of course, to his long letter to his son, Mirza Moghal, in which he actually makes merit of the slaughter of his Christian prisoners, and urges it as a reason why the soldiery should be more attentive to his commands. After this, to prolong any argument upon the subject would be improper. There is then but the last portion of the fourth charge unmentioned on; and to establish it we have copies of circulars addressed from the King to Rao Bhara, the ruler of Kutch Bhoj, to Ranjit Singh, Chief of Jasalmar, and to Rajah Gulab Singh, of Jummoo. The following extracts will be sufficient, viz.:

To Rao Bhara, Ruler of Cutch.

"It has been reported that you, every-faithful one, have put the whole of the infidels to the sword, and have thoroughly cleansed and purified your dominions of their unclean presence. We have been extremely gratified to hear of such conduct on your part, and you are therefore honoured with this address, to the intent that you will institute such arrangements through your territory as that none of the creatures of God may in any way be aggrieved or oppressed. Further, should any number of the infidels reach your dominions by sea, you will have them slain. In doing this you will act entirely in accordance with our pleasure and wishes."

To Ranjit Singh, Chief of Jasalmar.

"It is clear to our belief that throughout your dominions the name and trace of these ill-omened infidels, the English, must not have remained; if, however, by any chance or possibility some have escaped till now, by keeping hidden and concealed, first slay them, and after that, have made arrangements for the administration of your territory, present your military followers. Considerations and friendliness a thousand fold will be bestowed on you, and you will be distinguished by elevation to dignities and places which the compass of your qualifications will not have capacity to contain."

To Rajah Gulab Singh, Ruler of Jummoo.

"I have been made acquainted, by your petition, with all the particulars of the slaughter throughout your territory of the accursed unbelieving English. You are considered worthy of a hundred commendations. You have acted in this matter as all brave men ever acquitted themselves; may you live and prosper." Again: "Come to the royal presence, and slay the accursed unbelieving English, and all other enemies, wherever you may find them on the way. Whatever may be your hopes and expectations, the dignity and elevation to which you will be promoted amongst your equals will surpass all that you may be able to imagine; and you will further be rewarded and dignified with the title of Rajah." On one of the petitions to the King from a duffadar of the 4th Irregular Cavalry, boasting of having murdered his officers at Mozaffargarh, the order for an appointment in return is in the prisoner's own handwriting.

I herewith conclude my observations on the charges, and it will now remain, gentlemen, for you by your verdict to determine whether the prisoner at your bar, in retirement and seclusion, may yet claim the respect due to deposed majesty, or whether he must henceforth rank merely as one of the great criminals of history. It will be for you to pronounce whether this last king of the imperial house of Taimur shall this day depart from his ancestral palace, bent down by age and by misfortune, but elevated, perhaps, by the dignity of his sufferings and the long-borne calamities of his race, or whether this magnificent hall of audience, this shrine of the higher majesty of justice, shall this day achieve its crowning triumph in a verdict which shall record to this and to all ages that kings by crime are degraded to felons, and that the long glories of a dynasty may be for ever effaced in a day.

The consideration of the specific charges against the prisoner being now closed, I trust it may not be thought presumptuous, if I offer some observations on the evidence elicited as to to the cause of the late rebellion and of the existence of previous conspiracy. I have, in a form of this address, argued that if the native regiments, previous to the cartridge question, had been in a sound and well-affect ed condition, and had not been subjected to such a frightful and all but universal revolt could not have occurred; that there must have been some other and more latent power at work to have thus operated on a whole army scattered in different cantonments from Calcutta to Peshawur. I think that such could not have been accomplished without some secret mutual understanding, and some previous preparation, the establishment of which may appropriately be termed conspiracy. I have stated also that it seems as if we are not owing to any lack of any kind that such an amount of mutiny and murder has barely been attributed, but that some other cause is at work, and that this cause is the one to which I have referred in these proceedings and elsewhere if I failed to recognize in the cartridge question the immediate means or instrument adopted for bringing about a much-desired end. It seems to have been the spark, not accidentally shot forth, but deliberately chosen to explode a mine previously prepared. In alluding, then, to the existence of a conspiracy, I do not mean to imply that we have come upon traces of a particular gang of men specially banded together for the fixed definite object of causing the late rebellion in the native army in any manner similar to that in which we have seen it developed, but such evidence as we have been able to obtain does appear to me to point out that, for a considerable time antecedent to the 10th of May, agitation and dissatisfaction to British rule among the Mahomedans was more than ordinarily prevalent, and that such dissatisfaction had been stimulated by active and designing men, who have most craftily taken advantage of every circumstance that could be made suitable for such a purpose. The annexation of Oudh to British rule was, perhaps, one of these. It seems to have been particularly displeasing to them, as annihilating the last throne left to them in India; and for some other reasons, it would appear to have been almost equally unpalatable to the Hindu sepoys. It may, perhaps, have interfered with his position there as a privileged servant of the Company; for instead of having to rely on the influence and prestige of the British Government in dealings or disputes with the native landholders of that province, he found himself brought at once under direct European control. One of the witnesses, Jat Mal, draws a marked distinction between the Hindu sepoys and the Hindu tradesmen in reference to their feelings for the British Government, and perhaps the annexation of Oudh, with other causes, may tend to account for it. Being asked whether there was any difference between the Mahomedans and Hindus in this respect, he replies, "Yes, certainly, the Mahomedans as a body were all pleased at the overthrow of the British Government, while the merchants and respectable tradesmen among the Hindus regretted it." He, however, says that the general feeling throughout the army was the same both among the Hindus and Mahomedans, and that they were both equally bitter; and this view of the case, I think, supported by our experiences of both. The great bulk of the infant portion of the native army was undoubtedly Hindu, but we have not found this any check or restraint upon their revolting barbarity; and as far as the army as has been concerned, Hindus and Mahomedans appear to have lived with each other only in the enormity of their crimes. But apart from the army, the revolt has perhaps assumed many of the features of a Mussulman conspiracy, and it is, I think, probable that to Mussulman intrigue may eventually be traced those false and fabricated rumours which, adroitly mixed up with some small portion of truth, have been so instrumental in effecting the last vestiges of fidelity in an army whose faithfulness was at one time perhaps its very chiefest pride and boast. It does not belong to such an occasion as this to revert to past years, and step by step to trace the causes which have combined to destroy the reliance once placed upon those who are now so notorious for their perfidy. Some of these causes doubtless have been war, the inevitable, inherent to a state of continued progress on the one side and an inveterate priestly opposition to it on the other. It will be sufficient if I here merely allude to several previous occasions, not of very distant date, when some regiments of the native army showed how little they were to be depended on. On those occasions also it was evident that a unity of purpose and a singleness of feeling were in a short time organised by some process not immediately patent to their European officers; a mutual correspondence either by emissaries or letters was perhaps then initiated, and the lesson thus learnt was not easily forgotten. I do not mean to argue that from that time the native Indian army became one large debating society; very far from it; I believe that in their own fashion most of the sepoys were good and well-meaning servants of the Government. I say, in their own fashion, because it appears to me they are always deficient in natural firmness, and have no idea of strong moral rectitude; their fidelity, as long as it exists, is more of a habit than of a principle, upheld by superstition, but wanting the sustaining power of true religion. Among such a body as this there must always be some discontented intriguers; and who that knows anything of Asiatic character will not readily admit, especially with reference to Hindus, that the few are more potent for evil than the many for good? Let but three or four leaders come forth in all the open nudacity of crime, or mix themselves up in the secret intrigues of sedition, and the rest, if not immediately panic-struck, never think it their duty to check or oppose them. They may excuse themselves for a time, by holding aloof from what they do not approve, but, as in other Asiatic countries, they never seem to form part of their creed, either religious or political. The most serious crimes are thus passively encouraged; and temporary immunity securing proselytes, all are eventually engulfed in the same depths of infancy: thus the crimes of a few lead to the ruin of many. That these influences have been vigorously at work in extending the late rebellion I think few will be inclined to deny. I am aware that no correspondence, and perhaps little direct direct evidence to such a point, has been brought before the court; indeed, in reference to the sepoys, we have not been in a position to obtain either one or the other; still if, as has been currently and, I believe, truly reported, that the number of letters passing among our native soldiers, for a month or two prior to the outbreak, was very considerably larger than usual, this circumstance, combined with such facts as have come under our notice, would lead almost irresistibly to the conclusion that some sinister agitation had been extensively at work, and that increased dissatisfaction and subordination would necessarily be the result: moreover, that in such a state revolt would reduce itself to a mere calculation of time. In the above remarks I have attributed much of what occurred to the pernicious influence of evil intriguers, and it may naturally be inquired why these should have had greater effect at the present juncture than at any former one. Some of the causes I have already hinted at, such as the annexation of Oudh and the progress of European civilisation, outriding, and in its natural course threatening to sweep away the pry barriers upraised by priestly cunning for the preservation of the grossest ignorance, and thus commencing the subversion of religions that are unable to bear the light of even natural science. I believe too that the propagandists of sedition may artfully have availed themselves of some recent acts of the Government to spread panic and alarm in reference to future forcible interference with caste prejudices. I allude to the agitation about the remarriage of Hindu widows, the enlistment for general service, the cartridges, &c. I do not mean in this to offer the slightest apology for men whose conduct excites nothing but loathing and disgust. Pampered in their pride and besotted in their ignorance, they had as a body become too self-sufficient for military subordination and unhesitating obedience. Experienced, as they were, in mutual combination, they appear again easily to have entered into schemes for dictating to the Government their views in reference to imagined grievances; but that open, defiant mutiny had been generally resolved upon by the army—or, at any rate, by the Hindu portion of it, prior to the trial of the 3rd Light Cavalry troopers—is more, I think, than has been established. Up to that time there was no doubt a feeling of uneasiness, a restless apprehension, and an air of respectful mutiny pervading the native ranks. The sepoys in many instances appeared to imagine that disobedience to military command was scarcely criminal if accompanied by a salute and a submissive deprecation. Habituated to combination, and well aware of the strength of numbers, they latterly had seldom lost an opportunity of bringing forward their grievances, not individually, but in masses. On such points there was no difference between Mussulman and Hindu; they could both readily unite, and had already done so, for the purposes of insolent dictation. Indeed, if we search back into history, I believe we shall find that this has ever been what I may term the normal condition of Asiatic armies; and it is, perhaps, the necessary result of giving unity and power to large bodies of men without the checks furnished by education, loyalty, and religious principle, to control them; military discipline without these auxiliaries is a dangerous weapon, and one that has frequently been turned against those who have sharpened and prepared it. As a corollary to this, it may be observed that rebellion and insurrection among the unarmed and untutored people of Asia is rare indeed; even the forcible conversion of the Hindus to Mahomedanism under former emperors of India seems to have been sufficient to cause them to resist. It is, then, the attempt at domination by the sepoys alone that has to be guarded against. The distinctions of caste may, to a certain extent, at former periods have proved serious obstacles to any very extensive combination of men of different sects, either for political or other purposes, but we should remember that this very circumstance of caste companionship has necessarily the existence of a number of distinct self-governing societies, has habituated the people of Hindostan to meetings among themselves where publicity is avoided, and thus giving them their primary lessons in uniting for particular objects, has endowed them with a natural facility for more extended combinations, of a secret and sinister character. Under these circumstances, there wanted but the means and the occasion for carrying them out; and who does not perceive that the native army afforded the one and a variety of incidents have favoured the other. Brahman and Mussulman here met, as it were, upon neutral ground; they have had in the army one common brotherhood of profession, the same dress, the same rewards, the same objects to be arrived at by the same means. They frequently joined each other in their separate festivals, and the union encouraged by the favour of the Government was finally resorted to as a measure to subvert it. I do not, however, intend to dwell on all of the many influences which may have assisted in bringing about the recent catastrophe; such a discussion in this place might not be approved of. It seems to me, however, apparent that it was not and could not have been the greased cartridge alone that effected it. There was previous preparation among the sepoys, and there was also a general unsettling of men's minds throughout the country, and among the Mahomedans in particular. I believe, indeed, that the facts elicited on this point may be ranged appropriately under the head of "Mahomedan conspiracy," the chief object of which seems to have been to spread dissatisfaction and distrust of British rule, and, by the dissemination of false and evil reports, and by fabrications of the most insidious kind, to prepare all the people for change and insurrection. As far as can be traced, the commencement of this must have originated with the prisoner or some of those, such as Hasan Askari and others, who were admitted to his most secret and confidential councils. Be this as it may, there cannot, I imagine, be a doubt that in sending Sidi Kamal to Persia and Constantinople as an ambassador with letters to the sovereign of that country, soliciting aid and elevation to a throne, the prisoner became the principal in a conspiracy which indirectly, at any rate, must have been auxiliary to the recent frightful outbreak and its attendant horrors. It is worthy of particular notice, as connecting the two together, that this Sidi Kambur’s departure took place, according to the most reliable account, just two years before May 1857, and that his promised return, with the aid sought for, was fixed for the time when the outbreak actually took place. Coupling this with the prophecy among the Mahomedans that English sovereignty in India was to cease 100 years after its first establishment by the battle of Plassey in 1757, we are able to form something more than conjecture as to the causes which have been operating since the fanaticism its delusive hope of recovering all its former prestige. I have already alluded to the dream of Hasan Askari the priest, and its interpretation so plausibly contrived to correspond with the wishes of the King, and of those about him. The circumstance may seem trivial to us, but it was doubtless a means well calculated to make a deep impression upon the superstitious minds of those to whom it was addressed, and to cause expectation and belief in what was predicted by one said to be possessed of such powers, and accredited with holding direct communication with heaven. We learn too from the petition of Muhammad Darweesh to Mr. Colvin, the Lieutenant-governor, dated 27th of March 1857, that Hasan Askari, had, at this time, assured the King of Delhi that he had certain information that the prince royal of Persia had fully taken possession of, and occupied Bushire, and that he had entirely expelled the Christians, or rather, had not left one alive there, and had taken away many of them prisoners, and that, very soon indeed, the Persian army would advance by the way of Kandahar and Cabul towards Delhi. He moreover adds, “That in the palace, but more especially in that portion of it constituting the personal apartments of the King, the subject of the conversation night and day was the early arrival of the Persians. Hasan Askari has, moreover, impressed the King with the belief, that he has learned, through a divine revelation, that the dominion of the King of Persia will to a certain extent extend to Delhi, or the North of Hindustan, and that the splendour of the sovereignity of Delhi will again revive, as the Sovereign of Persia will bestow the crown on the King.” The writer goes on to say that throughout the palace, but particularly to the King, this belief has been the cause of great rejoicing, so much so that prayers are offered and vows are made, while, at the same time, Hasan Askari has entered upon the daily performance, at an hour and a half before sunset, of a course of propitiatory ceremonies to expedite the arrival of the Persians and the expulsion of the Christians. It has been arranged that every Thursday, several trays of victuals, wheatmeal, oil, copper money and cloth should be sent by the King in aid of these ceremonies, and they are accordingly brought to Hasan Askari.”

We thus see how early and how deeply the priesthood interested and engaged themselves in this matter, and how completely and exclusively Mahomedan in character was the state of the events. If we could but have stepped behind the scenes, and witnessed these ceremonies at which superstition presided, and have heard these prayers and vows offered up for the arrival of the Persians and the expulsion of the Christians, we should doubtless have had sufficient reason to believe in the forebodings of those dreadful tragedies which, to all time, will render the past year so painfully memorable. We may imagine and faintly conceive to ourselves some portion of the rancour of these Mahomedans, when we recollect not only their deeds, but the concentrated hatred which breathes through their petitions, and does not stop with this world, but rejoices in the idea of eternal torments for us hereafter. One cannot help inquiring whether there are really millions of human beings in Hindustan imbued with these feelings for Europeans. I will leave those who hear me to form their own opinions on this subject, without venturing to profane mine. We learned that during the Mahombi festival, she heard the Mahomedan women praying and teaching their children to pray for the success of their faith, and these prayers were generally accompanied by execrations against the English. Nor did even accomplishing the cruel death and sufferings of helpless women and children tend in any way to abate the ferocity of their malignity, or to wake one chord of mercy or commiseration in their breasts, for we find from the local newspapers that at the time this most hideous massacre was being perpetrated, about 200 Mussulmen were standing at the reservoir, uttering the coarsest abuse against the prisoners. Were it not too well attested, such demoniac malignity would scarcely be credible.

The next point to which I shall advert, is the circulation of the chapaties in the form of ship biscuits. Now, whether they were sent round under the fiction of a government order, signifying that in future there should be but one food and one faith, or whether, according to another interpretation, they were meant to sound a note of alarm and preparation, giving warning to the people to stand by one another on any danger menacing them, the contrivance was a most insidious one, and calculated to breed distrust and suspicion in the hearts of many who were strangers to such feelings before. That it created no stronger impression on the native mind than it did, is perhaps attributable only to the early check it received at the hands of authority, and it would doubtless be both interesting and important, if we could discover how and by whom such a proceeding was instigated. This and the false rumour about mixing ground bones with the flour had doubtless one common origin, and it is not going beyond the bounds of fair indication or reasonable inference, to attribute both one and the other to the unceasing wiles of Mahomedan conspiracy. We perceive that the Hindu sepoys under the impulse of a first re-action in their feelings, reproached the Mahomedans with misleading them, and this proceeding, that sooner or later, upon the whole Mussulman intrigue wherever our investigation has carried us, yet not one paper has been found to show that the Hindus, as a body, had been conspiring against us, or that their brahmins and priests had been preaching a crusade against Christians. In their cas case there has been no king to set up, no religion to be propagated by the sword. To attribute to them, under such circumstances, the circulation of these charlatans or the fabrications about ground bones in the flour, would be to attribute to them acts without a meaning, and a criminal deception without any adequate motive. A very marked feature in this Mahomedan conspiracy is the activity and persistence with which it has been carried out; the circulation of the charlatans having been early prohibited by authority, and thus rendered non-effective for the purpose of extensive sedition, some other expedient was necessary to replace it, and we at once find the tale of the “bone dust mingled with flour” very adventurously selected as the substitute. It was, in fact, still adhering to the material of charlatans, and continuing the symbol of “one food, one faith.” It was indeed the charlaty without its form, and without its inconveniences. The schemers had apparently learnt that the charlaty was too specific and too tangibly open to European interference to be largely availed of as an agent for evil, and hence its transformation into flour, the bone dust being added to the one as the equivalent of the form of the ship biscuit to the other. To give out then that such was the nature of the flour stored at all the depots of supplies along the Grand Trunk Road, for from them, during their marches, the sepoyos are in a manner compelled to get their food, was to attain the very object the conspirators must have most desired. If true, the Government had already commenced what would be deemed forcible conversion to Christianity. If they could then but establish a firm and general belief in this, their game was in their own hands; and that they did succeed in doing this to a great extent is, I imagine, undeniable. I must own that to me this apparently natural transition from the charlatans to its component parts seems a master stroke of cunning, and evidenced most able leadership in the cause the conspirators were embarked in.

To prove, moreover, that no mean order of talent was at work, and that all the appliances that craft and treachery could avail themselves of were resorted to, we have only to refer to the extracts from the “Authentic News,” and also to the other native publications of that period, and we shall perceive with what steadfast consistency the ulterior aim is always kept in view. The charlatans, the bone dust in the flour, the grease cartridges, were all most appropriate for the Hindus; but a different pabulum was requisite for the Mussulmans, and we shall now see with what subtility it was administered. The first paper commences by announcing that the King of Persia had ordered a concentration of most of his troops at Teheran, and then declaring it to be currently reported that such a demonstration against Dost Muhammad Khan was only a strategic move to cloak the King of Persia’s real design of fighting against and conquering the English, the editor makes certain that, at any rate, some change of feeling has taken place amongst the three powers. The next extract is dated the 20th of January 1857, and commences by asserting that all the newspapers agree in declaring that the King of France and the Emperor of Turkey had not as yet openly avowed themselves the allies of either the English or the Persians, but that their ambassadors were secretly visiting and presenting their gifts to both of the belligerents. “Some people,” says the editor, “think that the King of France and the Emperor of Turkey will not mix themselves up in the quarrels between the Persians and the English; but most people.” he adds, “say that they will both side with the Persians. As for the Russians, however, they make no secret of the readiness with which they are assisting, and will continue to assist, the Persians, whether it be with funds or with forces. It may be said that virtually the Russians are the cause of the war, and that using the Persians as a cloak, they intend to consummate their own designs regarding the conquest of Hindostan. It is to be believed that the Russians will soon take the field in great force.” Here then we have not only Persia and Russia advancing immediately upon India with immense armies, but France and Turkey to assist them, while the forsaken and devoted English are represented as by no means sure even of the alliance of the Afghans under Dost Muhammad; well might the editor, after announcing such formidable coalitions, somewhat dramatically exclaim, “Let the readers of the ‘Authentic News’ be prepared to see what the veil of futurity will disclose.”

Accordingly, in the next extract, we perceive that “the King of Persia had solemnly promised to his courtiers the governorships of the different presidencies and places: one is to get Bombay, another Calcutta, and a third Poonah,” while the crown of Hindostan is plainly spoken of as reserved for bestowal on the King of Delhi, this very prisoner before us. You will recollect, Gentlemen, that several copies of this paper, the “Authentic News,” used to be sent to the palace, and one can imagine the joy and exultation with which such passages must have been perused, especially when, added thereto, is the assertion that the Emperor of Russia had sent an effective and thoroughly appointed army of 400,000 men, with abundant munitions, to assist the King of Persia in his hostile designs upon India. But it was not in the palace, and by the princes alone, that such paragraphs were read with avidity; the whole population was intent on them. Sir Theophilus Metcalfe has told us that the subject of the advance of the Persians upon Harat was much discussed among the natives, and frequently in connexion with the idea of Russian aggression upon India; every newspaper having at this time its correspondent in Cabul. Nor indeed did the discussion and interest excited by these concocted hostile movements cease here, for the same witness declares that agitation about this time prevailed among the sepoyos, and that about five or six weeks before the outbreak it was currently reported in their lines, and much discussed among them, that 100,000 Russians were coming from the north, and that the Company’s Government would be destroyed, and in fact that the idea of a Russian invasion was universally prevalent. The venom and virus of these false publications were then taking their intended effect, and it would seem a mere perversion of reason longer to blind ourselves.
with the idea that the outbreak was fortuitous, or that a greased cartridge occasioned it. In a former article of the "Authentic News," we have seen that Mohammad aluded to it as a doubtful ally of the English. In this one, however, as events progress, he is spoken of as being secretly in league with the King of Persia, and that superstitious aid may not be lost sight of, it is remarked how wonderfully four distinct unexpected coincidences had impelled the King of Persia to declare war against the English. The first was that Herat, in another place described as the key of India, had so easily fallen into his possession; the second, the unforeseen coming of the Russians to assist him; the third, the nobles of Persia unanimously counselling an advance on India, and predicting that God would bestow victory; and the fourth, the simultaneous rising and assembling of the whole of Persia for the prosecution of a religious war. Portents and miracles were likewise brought forward still further to excite the Mahommedan mind, as the following extract from the "Authentic News," dated 15th of September 1856, will sufficiently prove. It is headed—

"Local News from the Hauni District."

"A man just come from the country tells the editor, that unlike other places, the Hui is being burnt there this season of the year, and the satrucks attending the festival are now going on. The man who states this ascertained, on inquiry, that the reason for the unreasonable observance of this festival is, that three girls were born at a birth, and the three spoke immediately. The first said, 'The coming year will be one of great calamities; various calamitous visitations will afflict the nation:' the second said, 'Those who live will see;' and the third, in an impressive and forcible tone, said, 'If the Hindus will burn the Hui in the present season they will escape all these evils. God alone is omnipotent.'"

It is too much, I am afraid, the case, with persons accustomed to European habits of thinking, to view such statements and articles as these merely in reference to the impression they would be likely to make on themselves. The taking of Herat, the predictions of the nobles, &c., and the fabulous prophecies of these girls, would, in that case, receive hardly passing attention. But we should commit a grievous and most fatal error if we were to gauge Asiatic thoughts and understandings by the same measure that would be applicable to our own. If, avoiding this mistake, we proceed to consider the above editorials in relation to the people they were written for, we shall find that they are not only most insipidly up to their particular prejudices, but are also made to bear a striking affinity to the fulfilment of their prophecies; to the dreams of Hasan Askari; to the negotiations of Sidi Rambar; and to the ancient traditions of Mahommedanism. Are we then to suppose that in all this there was no connexion between the palace and the press? were all these concurrences fortuitous? Can it be that the dreams of the priest, the plots of the court, and the fabrications of the newspapers worked accidentally together? We have already seen the decoys by which the Hindu sepoys were to be gained: and is it not the same spirit of evil that we can recognise here? Are the circumstances appealing to Mahommedan pride, to their superstitious bigotry, to their lust for religious war, and to their hatred for the English, dwelt upon with a less perfect knowledge of their peculiar inferences? In an extract from the "Authentic News," dated the 19th of March, it is stated that 900 Persian soldiers, with some officers of high rank, had entered India, and that 500 more were then staying in Delhi itself in various disguises. It is true that this is given out on the authority of one Sadik Khan, a person whose identity not being established, was evidently in disguise even to his name; but this very circumstance was no doubt a part of the scheme. It gave an air of greater mystery to the announcement of the paper, and seems to have been purposely contrived to let the imagination of the readers supply an exaggerated idea of his real rank and importance. How, it may be asked, even under this cloak of a false name, could such a statement be given forth in the leading newspaper of the city, without some deep and ulterior object? It not only assigns deep conspiracy to the Persians, but, if false, as we know it to have been, is proof of conspiracy in the editor and those who employed him. This name of Sadik Khan, be it remembered, was the one attached to the proclamation purporting to be from Persia, and put up in the Jama Masjid. The proclamation, then, and the assertion about these 900 Persian soldiers, were evidently parts of one and the same scheme, and seem to have been thus linked together that the one might, in a measure, support the other. If, for instance, any questioned the authority of the proclamation, there was the answer ready that the bringer of it was actually in the city with 500 other Persians also in disguise, and vice versa. If the advent of the Persian was disbelieved, was not the proclamation a voucher for its reality? The same depth of artifice is apparent every where; and the more we consider the subject, the more fully convinced we shall be of the wiles and stratagems so systematically resorted to. For instance, what would such a proclamation as that attributed to the King of Persia, have been, without some demonstration, feigned or real, to support it? The sword depicted on one side, and the shield on the other, would have been equally meaningless, but for the story of the men in disguise, and the officers of high rank who evidently must have been deputed to carry it through. The proclamation, so evidently false, is, for that very reason, one of our trust and most reliable expostions of conspiracy, and of Mussulman conspiracy too. It is, in fact, impossible to account for it under any other hypothesis. Who then was it that designed and wrote the proclamation? This question, I believe, could be answered in every detail by the editor of the paper, who has recourse to it so frequently. It is evidently a pet subject of his, one on which he seems to be thoroughly at home. He has the exact transcript transcript of it, is able to epitomise it, and no doubt was equally well informed as to the preparation of it.

I do not mean to wade through and to quote all the extracts from the newspapers that bear out the fact of a Mahomedan conspiracy. That appears to me unnecessary, for I believe I shall have no difficulty in establishing it by other testimony. However, there is one other extract, which it would be wrong to leave unannounced. It bears date the 13th of April, and must have been the origin of the report that Sir Theophilus Metcalfe alludes to, when he says that about fifteen days before the outbreak, it was currently reported that an anonymous petition had been presented to the magistrate, stating, "that the Cashmere gate of the city would be taken from the English. This being the chief stronghold in the city and main connexion with the cantonments of Delhi, it would naturally be the first point seized in any attempt at insurrection in the city, and being the only gate at which there was any military guard, the importance of it, in a strategical point of view, must have been obvious to all." Sir Theophilus Metcalfe proceeds to say, "that this petition was never received; but that the current report about it was indicative of what was then occupying the thoughts of many of the natives." So, no doubt, it was; but it was also much more than this, for it was the real exposition of an article which the editor dare not, without disguising it, put into print. With what ingenuity and craft the idea is worked out, so as to become intelligible only to those who were meant to understand it, must now be obvious to all. The editor says several petitions have been given into the magistrate's court, and in these it is also mentioned that "a month hence from this date an overwhelming attack will be made on Cashmere, of the salubrity and beauty of which a poet has said, 'that should a parched and burnt-up soul reach Cashmere, though he might be a roasted fowl he would recover his wings and feathers,' and that this cool and heavenly country will come into the possession of the writers of the petition." How, it may be asked, were the writers of the petitions given into the magistrate's court at Delhi to take Cashmere, and who does not now perceive that the Cashmere gate of the city of Delhi was thus indicated by the country from which it derives its name, and the salubrity and beauty of the former were to represent the importance and its fitness for their objects, of the latter. I shall not here pause to consider whether, under the simile of a parched and burnt-up fowl, the prisoner before us was intended. He no doubt expected to recover some of his lost plumeage by seizing the gate, and with it was meditating a flight to a higher elevation. In declaring on the 13th of April, that in one month from that date, an overwhelming attack would be made on this very point, for it was here the army were shot down, the editor of the "Authentic News" was either the confidant and accomplice of conspiracy, or had soared into the regions of actual prophecy.

The coincidence of the above cautiously worded announcement of the editor, and the indirect revelations of Jawan Delhi, are certainly startling. The doubly foretold attack took place on the 11th of May, and after what has been proved in regard to Mahomedan treachery, is there any one who hears me that can believe that a deep-planned and wellconcerted conspiracy had nothing to do with it?

The proofs of the intimate connexion of the prisoner with it, do not, however, rest here, for Moujud, the Abyssinian, who was not merely in the service of the King, but was his private special attendant, and was always near his person, takes Mr. Everett aside and tells him that he had better leave the company's service, and, with his troop, go over to the King, as this hot weather the Russians would be all over the place. Mr. Everett seems to have laughed at this, and to have thought it but the man's foolishness; but we have now direct proof that it was something far deeper than that; for at their next meeting, which occurred about a month after the outbreak had been accomplished, Moujud says to him, "Did I not tell you to come away?" and then as it were in explanation of the warning, proceeds to reveal to him the whole of the Sicku Rana's preparations how, two years before, he had been sent to Constantinople as ambassador from the King of Delhi; how he had started on the pretense of going to Mecca, and how he had promised that he would return when the two years had expired. This explanation seems to me a very remarkable one. It shows clearly that it was not merely on the basis of an expected disturbance at Meerut that such a proposal was made, but that a far wider web of sedition was weaving. Who can now believe that none of the Mahomedan native officers and men of the regiments at Delhi and Meerut had been tampered with? Mr. Everett, as a Christian, was surely one of the last the conspirators would apply to. It should be remembered, likewise, that Mr. Everett had none of his regiment with him at Delhi, and that had there been any Mussulman officers of the corps present, they would doubtless have been preferred to a Christian. At the time too when the application was made to him, the sentence of the Meerut court-martial must have been unknown in Delhi. It was not, then, as a consequence of, but as an addition and an adjunct to, what was anticipated at Meerut, that preparation was being made here; and by whom was this being done? Could a mere private servant and personal attendant, however great and favourite he might be, offer service to a risaldar and a whole troop of cavalry, withdrawing their allegiance from the Government, without any authority for so doing from his master? Who could have given the King's service to so large a body but the King himself? I say this because those who hear me, seriously to consider these questions, and then determine whether the answers to them do not bring home personal complicity in compassing the rebellion, to the prisoner in court. We have been informed, too, by Mukund Lai, the secretary, that it is now about three years since some infantry soldiers stationed at Delhi became disciples of the King, and that, on that occasion, the King gave each of them a document detailing the names and order of those who had preceded him in the direct line of disciples to each other, himself included, together with a napkin dyed pink as an emblem of his blessing. Now three years ago from the present date, is about the time of Sidi Kamber’s embassy to Persia, and of the apparent first commencement of Mahomedan conspiracy; and it certainly is a somewhat instructive fact to find that the occasion chosen for such an unwonted manifestation of piety on the one hand, and such an unusual display of kinase condescension on the other, was precisely that in which intimate relations between them of a more political character were beginning to be thought of. The agent of the lieutenant governor of course put a stop to these exhibitions; but, from that day, adds the witness, it may be said that a sort of understanding was established between the army and the King. I think it will be conceded, that in addition to the charges, five facts have been established, viz., the concerted dreams and predictions of Hasan Haskarci, the priest; the mission to Persia and Constantinople of Sidi Kamber, the Abyssinian; a deliberate continuous plan of exciting distrust and revolt among the Hindus; a similar plan, by the fabrication of the native press, for inciting the Mussulmans to a religious war; and lastly, by these means and others, an indirect, and also a personal tampering with the fidelity of the Hindus and Mussulmans of the native army. Has or has not a guilty participation in all these five points been traced to the prisoner? If the question (as I believe it will be), should be answered in the affirmative, there will still remain another to be responded to, of perhaps still greater importance, viz., Has he in these transactions been the leader, or the led? Has he been the original mover, the head and front of the undertaking, or has he been but the consenting tool, the willing instrument in the hands of others; the forward, unscrupulous, but stillpliant puppet, tutored by priestly craft for the advancement of religious bigotry? Many persons, I believe, will incline to the latter. The known reckless spirit of Mahomedan fanaticism has been the first aggressor, the vindictive intolerance of that peculiar faith has been struggling for mastery, sedulous conspiracy has been its means, the prisoner its active accomplice, and every possible crime the frightful result. It was, however, rather as the head of the Mahomedan religion in India than as the descendant of a line of kings, that I believe the prisoner’s influences were desired; the one indeed is so inseparable from the other that it is difficult to say where the difference commences. It was the union of the two, the religious and the political, that gave such importance to the prisoner as one of the abettors of conspiracy. Thus the bitter zeal of Mahomedanism meets us everywhere. It is conspicuous in the papers, flagrant in the petitions, and perfectly demoniac in its actions. There seems, indeed, scarce any exemption from its contagious touch. The Prince Mirza Abdulla robbing his confiding visitor and former friend, and then sending his uncle to compass her death, seems no exaggerated instance of it. It is again represented by the Mahomedan officer, Mirza Taki Beg, at Peshawur, who, while in high employment and pay by the British Government, comically quotes from his books that a change will take place, and that the British rule will soon be overthrown. It finds a still more unmistakable disciple in Karim Baksh, of the Delhi Magazine, who, while drawing English pay, avails himself of his scholarship and knowledge of Persian, to send circulars to the native regiments to the effect that the cartridges prepared in the magazine had been smeared with a composition of fat, and that the sepoys were not to believe their European officers if they said anything in contradiction of it. It will be recollected how active in his enmity this man proved when the King’s troops were attacking the magazine; how he kept up a secret communication with them, and how completely he identified himself, from the commencement, with the conspirators. Can there be a doubt that he was one of those who had been successfully tampered with; that, while ostensibly serving the English, he was, in reality, in the pay and confidence of those seeking their destruction? But why multiply instances of this sort? I would gladly cite some of a different tendency, and the petition of Muhammad Darwesh, in his admirable letter to Mr. Colvin, must not be passed over. It is one noble instance of faithfulness from a Mahomedan to the British. I am sorry I cannot class it with the petition purporting to be from Nabi Baksh Khan to the King, pronouncing it unlawful to slay women, and calling for a decree to that effect from the doctors of the Mahomedan religion; for since I delivered the paper into court considerable doubt has been thrown on it’s having been written at the time indicated, and it seems by no means improbable that it was fabricated after the capture of Delhi, for the purpose of obtaining rewards and other advantages. Indeed, a further attentive perusal of it has convinced me that it is so; for no one in the situation of Nabi Baksh Khan would have dared to advise or propose to the King to let the soldiery first wreak their rage on his own royal person, as Nabi Baksh Khan pretends to have done. There are certainly a few instances in which the Mahomedans have behaved with kindness to the English, and not the less pleasing on account of the humble grades in which these instances occur. We may, perhaps, deduce from this, that the teachings such as are prescribed by their prophet, have no softening effect on the hearts of his followers; any more, that fear of a such doctrines leads to ferocity and revolting crime, and is utterly incompatible with feelings of even ordinary humanity.

In the course of this address, I have dwelt long and frequently, upon those circumstances which appear to demonstrate that to Mussulman intrigue and Mahomedan conspiracy we may mainly attribute the dreadful calamities of the year 1857. I have endeavoured to point out how intimately the prisoner, as the head of the Mahomedan faith in India, has been connected with the organisation of that conspiracy either as its leader or its unscrupulous accomplice. I have alluded to the part taken by the native press and and Mahomedans, in general, as preparing the Hindus for insurrection, and the native army, in particular, for revolt; and perhaps, in further corroboration of such facts, it may be as well to advert to the share that may be assigned to the Mahomedians in getting the cartridge-refuse on the parade ground of the 3d Light Cavalry. Out of these 80 troops the far larger moiety was Mahomedan. These men had no caste, and to them it could not possibly have mattered whether pig's or cow's fat was smeared on the carriages or not. Captain Martineau tells us that at the Ambala depot, as far as the cartridge question was concerned, the Mahomedan sepoys laughed at it, and we thus perceive that these men initiated open mutiny without one pretext for so doing, or the shadow of an excuse. They had not even the extenuation of a pretended grievance; yet they, at once leagued themselves in rebellion against us, and induced the Hindus to join them, by specially exciting them on that most vulnerable of points, the fear of being forcibly deprived of their caste. I say, induced the Hindus to join them, for such is the evidence before us, and this too on a pretext in which the Mahomedians could have had no possible sympathy with them. Nor indeed were the Hindus long in discovering this, for as a witness, who has been frequently quoted, informs us: "Immediately after the battle of the Hindan, they spoke with much regret of the turn that affairs had taken, reproached the Mahomedans for having deceived them, and seemed to doubt greatly that the English Government had really any intention of interfering with their caste. Great numbers of the Hindu sepoys at this time declared that, if they could be sure their lives would be spared, they would gladly go back to the service of the Government; but the Mahomedans, on the contrary, used to assert that the King's service was much better than that of the English; that the nawab and rajas would supply the King with large forces, and that they must eventually conquer." If we now take a retrospective view of the various circumstances which we have been able to elicit during our extended inquiries, we shall perceive how exclusively Mahomedan are all the prominent points that attach to it. A Mahomedan priest, with pretended visions, and assumed miraculous powers—a Mahomedan King, his dupe and his accomplice—a Mahomedan clandestine embassy to the Mahomedan powers of Persia and Turkey resulting—Mahomedan prophecies as to the downfall of our power—Mahomedan rule as the successor of our own—the most cold-blooded murders by Mahomedan assassins—a religious war for Mahomedan ascendency—a Mahomedan press unscrupulously abetting—and Mahomedan sepoys initiating the mutiny. Hinduism, I may say, is nowhere either reflected or represented; if it be brought forward at all, it is only in subservience to its ever-aggressive neighbour.

The arguments in reference to a Mahomedan conspiracy are now closed. I do not mean that many others might not be deduced from the proceedings before us, for I have selected only those that appeared to me the most prominent. I would wish, however, before sitting down, to quote one question and answer from Captain Martineau's evidence: "Did you ever hear any of the sepoys speak complainingly of the efforts of English missionaries to convert natives to Christianity?" "Answer,—'No, never in my life, I don't think they cared one bit about it.' I believe there is no officer whose duties have given him much experience of the sepoys' character or any insight into his feelings and prejudices, but will readily confirm the correctness of this opinion. There is no dread of an open avowed missionary in India. It is not the rightful conversion to Christianity that either sepoys or natives are alarmed at. It is done by the efforts of persuasion, of teaching, or of example,—the only means by which it can be done,—it offends no caste prejudice, excites no fanatical opposition. A candid undisguised endeavour to gain followers to Christ, has never, that I am aware of, been viewed with the slightest sign of disapprobation by any portion of the natives, and were it more constantly before their eyes, who can doubt that it would remove this present dark and debasing error that Christianity is itself a caste, and its only distinguishing tenet the privilege of eating everything. If this degrading idea were removed, the chief fear of the Hindan would vanish with it. Let them see that it is impossible to make converts to Christianity by force, and you deprive the vindictives of their most potent weapon of mischief. Christianity, when seen in its own pure light, has no terrors for the natives. It is only when kept in the shade, that its name can be perverted to an instrument of evil. But I may, if I proceed further, be trenching on questions of State policy. I beg then to tender my thanks to the Court for the patient hearing they have given me, and to Mr. Murphy, the interpreter, for the able assistance he has, in that capacity, afforded me at this and the other State trials. His very high attainments as an oriental scholar have been most conspicuous. In the fluency of vernacular examinations; in the quick readiness with which all kinds of papers, in different hands, have been deciphered and read; and in the correctness and spirit of the written translations of documents of no ordinary difficulty, his complete knowledge both of Urdu and Persian has been thoroughly attested. The notes appended to many of these papers are valuable in themselves, and speak more forcibly than I can do of Mr. Murphy's very high proficiency as an interpreter. I should be wanting, both to him and myself, if I did not thus record my obligations to him.

SUPPLEMENT to the PROCEEDINGS on the TRIAL of Muhammad Bahadur Shah, Ex-King of Delhi.

EVIDENCE of Hakim Ahsan Ulla, late confidential Physician to the ex-King of Delhi.

Since the time when, during the administration of Lord Ellenborough, the nazr, which used to be presented to the King of Delhi on the part of the Governor-General, was discontinued, the King was always very much grieved. At first, he wrote on the matter to England, and he always afterwards used to complain against the order, and to express his dissatisfaction thereat.

Subsequently, the King was very much grieved in consequence of the Government not having acceded to his wish, that his youngest son, Mirza Jawan Bakht, might be recognised as heir-apparent, and having ruled that the eldest son, Mirza Fatch-ul-mulk, should be his successor. Some time afterwards, Mirza Haidar, son of Mirza Khan Baksh, son of Mirza Sulaiman Shikoh, arrived from Lucknow with his brother Mirza Muriel. They had frequent access to the King; and, first of all, prevailed upon him to write to the agent, intimating to that officer, that he (the King) had appointed them, (the princes) as his agents at the government office. The agent to the Lieutenant-governor, however, did not consent to this arrangement, as it was contrary to usage to depute shahzadahs on such duty. The shahzadahs then carried away with them several papers, after impressing upon them the seal of the King. They had free access even into the female apartments of the King.

At Lucknow Mirza Haidar offered an alam (standard) on the part of the King of Delhi at the shrine of Shah Abbas, and delivered to the Mujahid (high priest) a note written in pencil, and bearing the seal of the King of Delhi, in which the latter agreed to adopt the Shia creed, and dechrist the Sunni tenets. This information was obtained from communication received from one or two princes who professed the Sunni creed, and also from petitions received from several Sunnis to the address of the King. Among them I remember the names of Amin-ul-rahman Khan, a native of Delhi, but who was residing at that time at Lucknow, and Sidi Bial, who was formerly in the service of the King of Delhi, but had subsequently taken service at Lucknow. When the circumstance became known at Delhi, certain ulama*, waited on the King and begged to be informed of the facts. The King replied that Mirza Haidar had procured the King’s seal being put upon all papers which they had written, and had taken away the papers to Lucknow, and that the King had also written a shukka† to the Mujahid. But the King added that his shukka to the Mujahid merely stated that he (the King) loved very much the Ahl-i-Bait,‡ and that those who did not love them were not Musomedians. Subsequently, at the request of the King, the agent to the Lieutenant-governor procured for him from Lucknow, a copy of the King’s shukka to the Mujahid. The subject-matter of the paper coincided with that represented in the petitions which had been received from Lucknow. It was then believed, that besides the shukka to the Mujahid, the King must have addressed the King of Oudh also, who was also a Shia, and that Mirza Haidar must have held out hopes of gain to the King of Delhi if he should unite himself with the King of Oudh.

About

* Divines.
† Mandate.
‡ The literal meaning of the phrase is members of the family, i.e., the children of the prophet. These were distinguished from the friends of the prophet, who was immediately succeeded, not by members of his family, but by his friends. It will be remembered that the fundamental ground of opposition between Shias and Sunnis consists in the fact that the former do not admit the legality of the succession of the friends, and consider that they were usurpers; whereas the Sunnis, while admitting the right of the prophet’s children to succeed him, yet deny that the “friends” were usurpers.
About one year afterwards, a report was current to the effect that Mirza Najaf had proceeded to Persia. Mirza Najaf was brother to Mirza Haidar, and nephew to the King of Delhi. This report was also published in the newspaper conducted by Moallav Bakar, in which it was also mentioned that Mirza Najaf had been treated with consideration by the King of Persia. I inquired from Mirza Ali Bakht, who was a great friend of Mirza Najaf, whether the latter had carried any letter from the King of Delhi to the Sultan of Persia. He replied in the affirmative, and described its contents to be, to the effect that the King of Delhi had adopted the Shia creed, and the King of Persia should help him. Moreover, in that letter, the King of Delhi described his miserable and helpless condition. Mirza Ali Bakht at the same time stated that no reply had been received from Persia. A few months afterwards Sidi Kambar applied for leave to proceed on pilgrimage to Mecca. The leave was granted through Hasan Askari, a Pirzadah of Delhi, and some money was also given for his way expenses. After a few days Jat Mall, who was a servant of the British Government stationed on duty at the palace, inquired from me whether it was true that Sidi Kambar had proceeded on pilgrimage. He said he believed that the man had not gone on pilgrimage, but to Persia. I replied, I know nothing about the matter; but having made inquiries privately, I ascertained from the eunuchs that the man had really gone to Persia, and that Hasan Askari the Pirzadah, servant of the King, had delivered him, at night time, certain papers which bore the seal of the King. From this it appears to me clear that Sidi Kambar had been sent to Mirza Najaf, to obtain a reply to the previous communications of the King. These matters were concealed from all the Sunnis (among whom I myself was one), because Mirza Haidar had caused the King to change his religion. But I obtained the above information from other people. It may also be mentioned that the King was always very anxious to obtain intelligence of the events which were occurring towards Persia, during the time when war was going on at Bushire.

Mirza Haidar was not an insignificant man. He was a relative of the King of Delhi, i.e., his nephew, and used to receive a pension of 1,000 rupees per mensem from Lukhnow, He was a hereditary Shia; both his grandfather Sulaiman Sukh, and his father Khan Baksh, being of that persuasion. According to his faith, it was a pi-ous and creditable act to make proselytes, and he must have seen that he would derive much personal advantage, if he could succeed in converting the King of Delhi, inasmuch as he would in that case have three kings professing the same creed as his own, viz., the Kings of Delhi, Lukhnow, and Persia. There can be no doubt that the idea of communication with the King of Persia was first suggested by Mirza Haidar, who contemplated much advantage to himself; and it is probable that he desired that the conversion of the King should become known by means of a newspaper to the Shah of Persia, previous to the arrival of his brother, Mirza Najaf, in Persia, so that the latter might be treated with consideration and honour.

The King Bahadur Shah hardly cared to observe any processions in regard to his political plans. His common servants had much influence over him. Nothing could remain concealed from the eunuchs, because they had access to every place and at all times. This King also admitted his Begums to a share in his political policy. Accordingly, to please the Zinaat Mahall Begum, he applied for her son Jawan Bakht, though incapacitated by his younger age, to be recognised as his heir. The eunuchs were in possession of every secret, because they had free access even into the secret apartments; the eunuch Mahbub Ali was at the head of the King's affairs.

I never read the letter which was addressed by the King of Delhi to the King of Persia. I have repeated what I learnt from Prince Ali Bakht. I consider that the King of Delhi must have asked for help in the shape of money and troops. The King worshipped money; a proof of which assertion may be seen in the fact that he changed his faith in his old age, only through covetousness. I never heard from any person that any allusion was made in the letter to the King of Persia, to the scheme of exciting the native army to mutiny against the Government; nor do I consider that any such scheme could have been alluded to at that time, because nothing of the sort was then talked of. I think that at the time when the King of Delhi thought of seeking a union with Persia, it did not occur to any one to arrange for winning over the native army.

I learnt from the eunuchs (Basant and Kali Khan, the persons who informed me that Sidi Kambar had been entrusted with sealed papers) that at the time when the papers were sealed and delivered to Sidi Kambar, the king directed the man to carry them to Mirza Najaf, and to obtain replies to them and the previous communications. I think that there was nothing new mentioned in the papers which were delivered to Sidi Kambar, because, although I never read them, the eunuchs would have mentioned it to me if there had been any.

Sidi Kambar went to Persia after it had been known and published in a newspaper, that Mirza Najaf had reached that country. The province of Oudh was incorporated with British territory, about one year after Sidi Kambar had left India. The emeute at Hambirpur also occurred after the departure of the Sidi. From the conversation of the King, it appears that when war was going on in Bushire, he had strong hopes of receiving aid from Persia in the shape of money and troops, and during that period he used constantly to make inquiries regarding the events which were transpiring in that quarter.

When the King first wrote to Persia, nothing was known in regard to his expectations, because everything was concealed. But when it was known that Mirza Najaf had reached Persia, Persia, and battles were being fought at Bushire, it appeared that the King had hopes from that quarter.

Bahadur Shah was not concerned at the determination of Government to cause the palace to be evacuated by the royal family after his death, because this determination of the Government was known after the right of succession had been allotted to Mirza Fateh-ul-mulk, to whose succession the King was opposed. Indeed, the King used often to remark that the Mirza (Fateh-ul-mulk) had little reason to rejoice at his succession, for after him (the King), his successor would neither have any authority, nor would he be permitted to reside in the palace. This shows that the above determination of Government in regard to the evacuation of the palace was not the cause of the King’s alienation.

During the period of the war with Persia, some of the princes used to observe that if the Emperor of Russia were to aid the Persians, the English would be defeated, and the Persians would become masters of India; and the King himself coincided in this opinion.

I never heard that Mirza Najaf conveyed any intelligence from Persia to Delhi. He might have sent news (if he did send any), to his brother Mirza Haidar at Lucknow.

When the King expected aid from Persia, no effort was made to win over any of the native princes; and the reason is that Mirza Haidar never returned from Lucknow after he proceeded to that capital. This individual was a very skilful intriguer; he first suggested the idea of communicating with the King of Persia, and it is likely that he would have also suggested the winning over of the native princes if he had been present at the court of the King.

The King was offended with Lord Ellenborough for his Lordship’s having discontinued the muzar which used to be presented on the festival of the Eed, the Bakr Eed, the Nau Roz and the King’s birth-day. He was also offended with the Lieutenant-governor of Agra, for having refused to recognise Mirza Jawan Bakht as the heir-apparent, and allotting the right of succession to Mirza Fateh-ul-mulk. With the British Government generally, or any other British officer individually, he was not dissatisfied; nor was he hostile to the Christian religion.

In making “murids” (disciples) the King was guided more by religious than worldly motives. The sepoya of the native army were not the only men who became his murids. Others also adopted him as their spiritual guide. This practice was in vogue before the disturbances. Bahadur Shah’s father also used to make murids, though Bahadur Shah introduced the innovation of giving a handkerchief coloured light red to his followers. This practice originated in this wise. The Pir-azadhe of Delhi, who were spiritual in-structors to the kings of Delhi, impressed upon the minds of the people that the King was the divine viceroy in spiritual matters upon earth, and that it was a creditable act to adopt him as their spiritual guide.

After all, there is this much advantage in adopting the practice, that the spiritual instructor is obeyed by his followers on all matters whether secular or spiritual. The practice of making murids, first came into operation during the time of the father of Bahadur Shah; but the latter gained a larger number of followers.

Only one method existed in which murids were made.

I never heard that the King had any idea that his making murids of the native sepoyas would alienate them from the British Government. But it is evident that a “Pir” expects his murids to unite themselves to him under all circumstances.

I never heard that any sepoy out of the number who resorted to Delhi, mentioned to the King that he (the sepoy) had joined in consequence of his being his (the King’s) disciple. Indeed, none of the disciples came, nor did any produce the red handkerchief. Moreover, none of the sepoyas adopted the King as his spiritual guide during the five months of their occupation of Delhi. I am not aware of the cause. Perhaps those sepoyas who were the King’s disciples, were absent on leave, and so far as I could gather from the records of Mirza Moghal, which have been since taken over by Government, and which I had seen, I can say that I found no mention of any of the King’s disciples therein, nor did I observe in them any petition which contained an account of any of the murids. No sepoy became the King’s murid during the five months following the cartridge question. I was present all along, and should have known if any had become the King’s disciple.

The King’s murids were made invariably from among Mahomedans, and from no other caste.

I never heard that the King carried on correspondence with the native troops; but he used to make anxious inquiries about the native army whenever any war took place. And inasmuch as he was dissatisfied with the British Government, he took a pleasure in hearing of their defeat or reverses. He expected that any other ruler who might subvert the British rule would treat him with greater respect and honour, in consideration of the King’s dynasty. In short, he believed that his own prosperity would go hand in hand with the ruin of the British power.

I do not remember well, but I believe information must have reached the king of the mutiny of some of the native regiments after the annexation of Panjab, in consequence of the discontinuance of batta; and I doubt not but that the King learnt the fact with satisfaction.

I do not remember exactly the month in which intelligence was received of the regiment near Calcutta having refused to receive the new cartridges. I only know that the information was obtained from a Calcutta newspaper; and when it was known that the discussion about about the cartridges was spreading, it was remarked that, inasmuch as the matter touched the religion of the people, the excitement would spread extensively over the entire length and breadth of the country, and the native army would desert the British Government, whose rule would then be at an end. The King remarked that he would, in that case, be placed in better circumstances, inasmuch as a new dominant power would treat him with greater respect and consideration.

The princes of the royal family used to remark that the native army would go over either to Nepal or Persia. But they had no idea that they would unite themselves with the King, because he had neither money nor troops.

Although the issue of the new cartridges was the ostensible cause of the mutiny, it was not in reality so. Some individuals of the native army had long before been adverse to and dissatisfied with the British Government. They considered that they were treated with severity, and eagerly seized the opportunity of the issue of new cartridges as affording a good pretext for their defection. The wily and intriguing among them made it the fulcrum of their designs to excite the whole army against their rulers, and, mixing therewith a religious element, alienated the minds of the troops from the Government. They believed that they alone constituted the power of Government, and that against them the British had not the means of fighting. The mass of the people were ignorant; they believed that the Government was intent upon polluting their religion; indeed, it was notorious that the Commander-in-Chief had undertaken upon himself to christianise the whole of India in two years. Thus did the intelligent and cunning plan their designs; and the ignorant followed them.

I consider that the native army was impregnated with malevolent intentions towards the British Government; and had even the new cartridges not been issued, they would have made some other pretext for mutiny, because if they had been actuated by religious motives alone, they would have given up service; and if they wished to serve they would not have mutinied.

It was the King's opinion that the Government really intended to change the religion of the people; but I frequently explained to him that this was only a rumour set afloat by wicked people. For, I added, the British were wise people who would do nothing which was calculated to injure whole masses of people, nor could I believe that they would seek to injure an army from whom they expected good service. This argument satisfied the King, whenever I explained to him; but he relapsed into his own way of thinking as often as he listened to the representations of his eunuchs and rajas.

No intelligence was received in my presence from Meerut. Early after sunrise on the morning of Monday, a sepoy of the volunteers, who was stationed on duty at the Lahore Gate, came and told the porters of the Dewan-i-khas that the Government troops had mutinied at Meerut, and that the infantry and cavalry would shortly arrive at Delhi. About an hour after this, the regiment stationed in the cantonment of Delhi entered the palace, and shortly afterwards the Meerut troops also arrived in the palace. Before this, no news was received.

It was never mentioned in my presence that any information had been received of a court-martial having assembled at Meerut to try those sepoys who had refused to receive the new cartridges.

It is not unlikely that news to this effect was received by means of some newspaper, five or six days afterwards.

I do not believe that any one was sent by the King to Meerut to procure information of the proceedings at Meerut, in regard to the refusal of the sepoys to receive the cartridges at the time when they were going on at that place.

I did not hear that Zinat Mahall had sent any one to Meerut for the above purpose.

Yes, the King was surprised to see that the troops had come to him. I also wondered at the circumstance, because nothing had transpired immediately before their arrival, which might have led us to expect them, though when the discussion about the cartridges first became known it was believed that it would cause some mischief.

On the evening of the same day on which the troops arrived, I represented to the King that nothing good could be expected from them, inasmuch as they had mutinied against their masters. And I addressed a letter to the Lieutenant-governor of Agra, on the part of the King, informing him of the arrival of the troops, after they had murdered their European officers, and representing the King's inability to take any measures against them, and begging for help in the shape of European troops.

In the morning I had no private conversation with the King, because the palace was so much crowded with the mutinous troops, and the King's servants, that I did not find any opportunity of speaking to him.

The King was not prepared beforehand for the arrival of the mutineers, because when I and Ghulam Abbas, the King's wakil, communicated to him (the King) the request of the officer commanding the palace guards and the agent to the Lieutenant-governor, to the effect that two of the King's guns, together with artillerymen, might be sent to the Lahore Gate,

* Men's motives are seldom pure; they are swayed by mixed desires. The sepoys believed that their religion was in danger, and resisted accordingly. Had they given up service, what was to become of them? Religion and personal interest combined to urge them to resist.
Gate, and also two palaquins, with bearers, to Captain Douglas, the King, without making any excuse, gave orders for their being sent as requested.

Nobody can tell what was the object of the distribution of the chapatis. It is not known who first projected the plan. All the people in the palace wondered what it could mean. I had no conversation with the King on the subject; but others talked in his presence about it, wondering what could be the object.

I consider that the chapati affair probably originated with the native troops, and the distribution first commenced in Oudh. I also wondered what it was, but considered that it implied something.

I consider that the distribution of the chapatis first began in Oudh. It was the opinion of some, that the native troops had designed these chapatis as emblematical of some particular object. Others believed that there was some charm attached to them, insomuch as they were distributed unknown all over the country, and without it being known who first originated the idea, and whence they were first sent out. People also believed that these chapatis were the invention of some adept in the secret arts, in order to preserve unpolluted the religion of the country, which, it was reported, the Government had proposed to themselves to subvert in two years.

I understood from the officers of the army that they had mutinied in consequence of the Government having used fat in the preparation of cartridges, and mixed ground bones with flour, which Government wished to use as the means of converting the people. This was generally assigned as the reason of their taking up arms against Government; but I learnt from Haidar Hassan, who was very familiar with the officers of the troops, that they spoke as follows:—"If we continue united together, we shall not be defeated by the Government troops, but shall become masters of the country."

I consider that the native troops mutinied in the hope of worldly gain. The admixture of religion was only intended to disguise their real object. If they were really fighting for religion, they would not have plundered the houses and property of the people, nor would they have oppressed and injured them, but would have fought only against the British Government.

After the breaking out of the mutiny, the rebellious troops used to say they were masters of the country, and that they would take different princes to different provinces of the country.

The volunteer regiment of Delhi said, that before the breaking out of the mutiny, they had leagued with the troops at Meerut, and that the latter had corresponded with the troops in all other places, so that from every cantonment troops would arrive at Delhi.

After the defection of the native army, I understood that letters were received at Delhi, from which it was evident that they had beforehand made common cause among themselves. The mutineers at Delhi also wrote to other regiments, requesting them to come over. Indeed, at the request of some of the mutinous officers, the King addressed orders to the troops at Neemuch and Firozpur, and other places, inviting them to proceed to join him. The usual drift of letters addressed by the Delhi mutineers was this: "So many of us have come in here; do you also, according to your promise, come over here quickly."

At the request of the mutinous officers, the King used to give orders to the munsifs to write as they (the officers) desired.

I cannot give any further information in regard to the preconcerted conspiracy of the native troops; I have said all I know.

Before their defection the native troops had settled it among them to kill all Europeans, including women and children, in every cantonment.

I cannot explain, in detail, the arrangements which were made by the mutineers before their defection. I consider, however, that all their plans had not been yet matured when the event took place.

I did not hear that any particular date had been fixed for the execution of the plans of the mutineers; but I am inclined to think that none was fixed, because if there had been, allusion would have been made to the fixed time, in the letters which were addressed by the Delhi mutineers to the other troops, which was not the case. I mean some such language as the following would have been used in those letters, viz., "You promised to rise up on such a date, but you have not arrived yet, so that you have not kept your promise."

When I stated above, that the "event" took place before the plans of the mutineers had been matured, I referred to the "event" which occurred at Meerut.

Indeed, I consider that had the event at Meerut not taken place so soon, the plans of the mutineers and their union would have become more perfect with greater length of time.

The breaking out of the mutiny at Meerut somewhat before the proper time, may be ascribed to one of the two following causes, viz., either the Meerut troops were too precipitate, or the Government behaved severely towards them.

Gulab Shah, the officer of the 3rd Cavalry, who came in from Meerut, in alluding to the severity of the Government, stated that they (Government) disarmed the troops and imprisoned the troopers in irons.

FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

In addition to the issue of the new cartridges, the sepoys numbered among their grievances and causes of their dissatisfaction with Government, the short leaves allowed to the troops, the discontinuance of batta, the sending out of troops to sea on shipboard, and, lastly, the little consideration (compared to previous times) shown, of late, to the sepoys in army.

But they brought forward, most conspicuously, the issue of cartridges as the strongest cause of their mutiny. Their other grievances, as above mentioned, were not adduced so prominently. The reason of this is obvious. In the cartridge dispute a religious element was involved, which served their purpose; inasmuch as the mass of the people (who are necessarily ignorant), were deceived and really believed that they were fighting for religion. The wicked were guided by motives of gain.

The mutineers spoke of the British with contempt; they called them "Nasara*" and infidels, but they did not use foul language against them.

They used to say that the Government would not allow any chief to hold territorial possessions, and would not treat the natives of India with any consideration.

In the native army both Hindus and Mahommedans were dissatisfied with Government, and the Hindus predominated in number; but, of the inhabitants of Delhi, the Hindus were dissatisfied in a less degree than the Mahomedans.

The reason of the greater dissatisfaction of the Mahommedans was that on the occasion of the " Bakr Eid," when there was a quarrel in regard to the slaughter of kine, the decision of the authorities was not agreeable to the Mahommedan population. In addition to this, it was reported that the Government desired to make Christians of the natives of India by causing them to eat pork.

Latterly, it was believed that the sepoys repented of their* misconduct, and a proof of their repentance might be found in the fact that many secretly left their regiments; some applied to their officers for promotion of rank and increase of pay, and when their request was not granted, they left openly.

The people in the palace or the princes did not know previously that the sepoys of the volunteer regiment at Delhi had leagued with the Meerut troops against the Government. This was only known after the officers of the mutinous troops said so at Delhi.

I consider that no correspondence passed between the sepoys and the native chiefs, before the open mutiny of the former; for if any had passed, allusion would have been made in the subsequent letters addressed to the chiefs, to the circumstance, which was not the case. Moreover, if any such communication had been made, some portion of the mutinous troops would have proceeded to some of the chiefs with whom they had leagued. This also was not the case.

I consider that the native army mutinied of their own accord, and not at the instigation of any chiefs, because in the latter case, the mutineers would have either themselves proceeded to join their instigator, or caused him to join them.

The mutinous troops would not appear to have won over the people of the country, because if they had, they would have treated them with consideration, and would not have oppressed and plundered them as they did.

The sepoys had not, before their breaking out into mutiny, united to themselves the Mussulman population of Delhi. If they had, they would not have oppressed and plundered the Mahommedans of Delhi in the manner they did.

The abandoned classes of the city required no instigation to rise up. The confusion and disorder of the time in itself encouraged them to unite with the sepoys.

I am of opinion that no agreement was made between the Googurs and the mutinous troops beforehand. But, afterwards, certain mutinous officers caused the King to grant a drum and standard to two Googurs of the neighbourhood of Delhi, who were enjoined to plunder the provisions of the British camp. In like manner a rao, who resided in the vicinity of Sikandrah, in the Bulandshahr district, received a drum and standard from the King for similar service.

During the period of disturbances, no complaint was made against the defects of the civil administration under the British rule. The sepoys did not complain, because they were themselves tyrannical; and the people had seen too much of the oppressive administration of the sepoys to complain against that of the British.

Among the cavalry officers, Gulab Shah : among these of the infantry regiments, the officers of the " Runseet "† and " Alexander "‡ regiments ; and among the King's servants, Sidis Nasir Khan and Basant, eunuchs, were the principals who instigated the murder of the fifty Christians and Europeans. The reason is, that Gulab Shah and his party was encamped in the Hayat Baksh garden, and used to be seated at the entrance of the royal apartments in the company of the eunuchs.

Among the princes, Prince Abdulbaker and Mirza Khair Sultan were the principals who caused the Europeans to be murdered. The others were only their accomplices.

I spoke to the king on the subject in the presence of the eunuchs. When the latter, at the request of Gulab Shah, solicited the King's orders for killing the Europeans, I explained to to the King that it was forbidden in our own religion to kill women and children. I suggested to him that it was also prudent in a worldly point of view to preserve them. I advised him to obtain a "fatwa" (verdict) from the doctors of the Mahommedan religion, prohibiting the slaughter of the women and children, and to show the verdict to the officers of the army, and then to keep them in custody in a safe place, and to preserve them as he would his own family and children. I explained to him the immediate and also remote advantages of such conduct. I explained to him that such was the line of conduct adopted by Sirdar Mahommed Akbar Khan, of Cabul, towards the Europeans who became his prisoners during the Afghan war. I pointed out to the King how, in consequence of such conduct, Akbar Khan succeeded in procuring the liberation of his father, the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan, from confinement in the hands of the British, and how the Amir was ultimately restored to his country and kingdom.

The effect of my suggestions was, that the King at that time withheld his sanction to the murder of the Christians, and for two days their lives were preserved. But afterwards, the applications prevailed upon the King to give his assent, and the eunuchs Basant and Sidi Nasir delivered up the Christians to Gulab Shah, who put them to death by the side of a reservoir in the palace.

If the King had kept the women and children in his own female apartments, and on their being demanded by the sepoys had explained to the latter that he would only agree to their (the Christians) being murdered, after his (the King's) own women and children had been first put to death, it was very probable that the sepoys would not have dared to enter the royal seraglio to forcibly seize and kill the Christians.

The King could have safely said and done so. He frequently spoke to the sepoys as resolutely.

Had the King's consent not been given, it was not possible that a false entry would have been made in the official documents to the effect that his sanction had been given.

The officers of the Ranseet and Alexander regiments were extremely hostile to Europeans and Christians, and even if Gulab Shah, and the two eunuchs Basant and Sidi Nasir, had not existed, the former would have demanded the murder of the Christians. But I do not consider that, except them, there were any others so extremely hostile to the Christians.

These Christians were put to death by Sidi Nasir, Allah Dad Wilayati, and the sowars of Gulab Shah, and certain Khas-badars of the King. They were killed with swords. Allah Dad Wilayati was in the service of the King.

First of all the regular troops came, then followed the volunteer regiment of Delhi and entered the palace. The troops were accompanied by two companies of the volunteers who were posted at the gates of the palace. The officers of the volunteer regiment said in a loud voice, "Here are the sowars from Meerut, the infantry regiments will follow shortly." I gathered from the talk of the officers of the Delhi regiments that there was perfect union of mind between the Delhi and Meerut troops. Moreover, in the letters and orders which were addressed to the native regiments in other cantonments, the sepoys never alluded to any promise of the addressees to proceed to Delhi. It was merely stated in those letters that such and such regiments had come in, "Do you come over also?"

In my opinion the mutineers had several inducements for throwing themselves into the city of Delhi:

First. Delhi was close to Meerut, where the mutiny commenced, and the Meerut troops were of one mind with those of Delhi.

Secondly. There was considerable treasure and abundance of magazine stores at Delhi.

Thirdly. There was a wall round Delhi, and the city could be well defended.

Fourthly. The King of Delhi had no army, and was defenceless; and—Fifthly. The King was a personage, to wait upon whom all chiefs, Hindu or Mahommedan, would have considered an honour to themselves.

The troops did not inform the King previously of their intention to go over to him, nor had the King any knowledge of the volunteer regiment having made common cause with the Meerut troops.

I never heard any complaints from the people of Delhi regarding the resumption of inams or rent-free grants, because I am not aware that any such grants had been resumed. But the sepoys used to say that the Government would gradually resume all inams and pensions, and leave none in the enjoyment thereof.

The annexation of Oudh was much talked of at Delhi. But, as the majority of the Mahommedan population of Delhi are Sunnis, and a monsery of their sect, named Amir Ali, had been blown, together with about four or five hundred Sunnis, from the mouth of cannon, on the occasion of the mutiny at Hanuman Garhi, by order of the King of Oudh, the Mahommedans of Delhi did not regard the annexation of Oudh with dissatisfaction. But, on the contrary, they believed that the King of Oudh had been punished, for having shed the blood of innocent Sunnis, in the loss of his kingdom. As regards the Hindus of Delhi, I never heard that they were in any manner dissatisfied at the annexation of Oudh.

The sepoys used to remark that the English would take possession of every country in the same manner as they had occupied Oudh; but I did not perceive that they were particularly grieved at the annexation of Oudh.

I heard no complaints from the sepoys regarding the revenue administration under the British rule in Oudh.

I do not consider that the annexation of Oudh was one among other causes of the revolt of of the sepoys. My impression is, that they had no cause to be grieved on that account. They lost nothing by it, but, on the contrary, were liberated from the oppression of the Oudh Government. The sepoys who were at Delhi never complained particularly against the annexation of Oudh. But they certainly used to say, that the British would take possession of every province as they had occupied Oudh; and that they took possession of that country even though the King did not fight against them.

I consider that the sepoys would have mutinied, even though Oudh had not been annexed, because they were ripe for revolt.

Three or four of the Luknow mutinous regiments addressed petitions to the King, in which they stated that they would proceed to Delhi after they had made themselves masters of Oudh, and added that they had besieged the British in Baillee Guard. Kudrat-ulla Khan Rissaldar, accompanied by 100 sowars, also brought a petition from all the Oudh troops, and was introduced into the King's presence by Bakht Khan. He presented the coin recently struck in the name of Bahadur Shah. The impression on the coin was as follows:—

"Siraj-ud-din Bahadur Shah Ghazi has struck upon gold the coin of victory."

The petitioners stated that they had elevated a son of Wajid Ali Shah on the gaddi, on the condition that he should be the Wazir of Bahadur Shah, and acknowledge allegiance to that King. They added that they had caused the prince to write down an agreement to that effect, and had further explained to him that he had been raised to the throne subject to the sanction of the King.

The King ordered Bakht Khan to reply to the petition conveying his sanction to the arrangement.

The gold mohurs which were presented by Kudrat-ulla Khan Rissaldar, to the King, are now in the possession of the Commissioner of Delhi.

I do not consider that Wajid Ali Shah, the King of Oudh, had any share in these proceedings.

If Wajid Ali Shah or Ali Naki Khan had been in league with the sepoys, the circumstance could not have remained a secret, and moreover the latter would have proceeded to Luknow. Furthermore, in that case, the sepoys would not have raised to the throne the younger son of Wajid Ali Shah, to the exclusion of Wajid Ali Shah himself, and his eldest son.

I am of opinion the Oudh troops would not have proceeded to Delhi after they had succeeded in taking possession of Baillee Guard, because they would have been taken themselves to the management of the extensive territory of Oudh. I consider that the authority of the son of Wajid Ali Shah, whom they had raised to the throne, would have been only nominal.

I never heard that any correspondence was carried on with Wajid Ali Shah during his residence in Calcutta, and I believe that none took place. Neither was any correspondence carried on with Ali Naki Khan. Formerly some correspondence took place through the medium of Mirza Haidar; but when that individual gave out, at Luknow, that the King of Delhi had become a convert to the Shia religion, and the King denied at Delhi that he had, Mirza Haidar discontinued writing to the King, nor did he come to Delhi afterwards, and as Mirza Haidar was the medium of communication between the King of Oudh and Delhi, and that man had not accompanied the King of Oudh to Calcutta, no correspondence took place between the two kings.

I did not hear from any of the sepoys that either the King of Oudh, or any of his relatives or dependants instigated the sepoys to revolt. I cannot speak of the Oudh troops, because none came from thence to Delhi.

During the disturbances I heard that Mirza Haidar was at Luknow, but that he was detained along with other native chiefs of influence at Baillee Guard by the British officers.

No correspondence took place between Mirza Haidar and the King of Delhi during the disturbances. Indeed, all correspondence between them had ceased, since Mirza Haidar had reported at Luknow the conversion of the King to the Shia religion.

I shall now describe from what regiments and places petitions were received by the King.

Neemuch.

The Neemuch troops addressed a petition to the King, in which they stated that they had arrived at Agra, where they had gained a victory, and driven the British into the fort, which they had laid siege to. But they added that they had no heavy guns, so that they intimated to proceed to Delhi, and return from thence to Agra, carrying along with them heavy guns from Delhi, and they would then take the Agra Fort. They mentioned in their petition that they had killed their European officers. This petition was written from Mutha, and in the names of Ghous Khan and Hira Singh, subahars. It was brought by a sutler-sowar, and was presented to the King by Bakht Khan, who spoke in very high terms of the Neemuch troops. The King directed that a reply be addressed, calling them over to Delhi. A reply was sent accordingly.

Jhansi.

A messenger brought a petition from the Jhansi troops, and delivered it to the eunuchs, who presented it to the King. In this petition the writers stated that they had killed their 162. European European officers, and were desirous of proceeding to Delhi. The King directed a reply to be sent telling them to come over.

DANAPUR (DINAPURE).

A petition was brought from Dinapore by an officer of the Delhi troops, about two and a half months after the breaking out of the mutiny, in which the writers stated either that they had started for Delhi, or intended to do so. The King ordered a reply to be sent, telling them to come over. I cannot say positively whether any troops came from Dinapore or not.

ALLAHABAD.

Two sepoys, in the disguise of travellers, brought a petition from the Allahabad troops. It was presented to the King through the officers of the Volunteer Regiment about a month and a half after the mutiny. They signified their devotion to the King, and expressed their intention to proceed to Delhi. A reply was sent telling them to come over.

ALIGARH.

A petition was presented on the part of the Aligarah troops to the King by an officer of the Delhi mutineers about two and a half months after the rebellion. I do not know whether the petition was brought by a messenger, or whether it arrived by dák. The contents were, either that the petitioners had started for Delhi, or intended to do so. They were told in reply that they might come over.

MUTHRA.

Two messengers brought a petition from the Muthra troops about 20 days after the mutiny, which was presented by the officers of the Volunteer Regiment. The writers stated that they were proceeding to Delhi, bringing treasure along with them. A reply was sent as usual. Shortly afterwards these troops arrived, bringing one lakh of rupees of treasure.

BULANDSHAHR.

Mirza Moghal produced before the King a sepoy belonging to the Bulandahahr troops who had brought a petition, in which it was said they were marching to Delhi with all the treasure they had in their possession. Accordingly they brought 30,000 rupees with them; but I heard that the sepoys had appropriated a portion of the treasure to themselves as they were marching to Delhi.

ROORKEE.

I believe that a sepoy, in the disguise of a traveller, brought a petition from the Roorkee troops, which was presented to the King about a month and a half after the rebellion by the officers of the "Mabez" regiment. The contents were, that the writers were desirous of proceeding to Delhi, and would serve the King truly. A reply was sent as usual, and about 300 men of the Sappers and Miners arrived, under the command of Kadar Baksh. This officer became very intimate with Mirza Khair Sultan, and acquired some influence over the King. He frequently had a voice in the proceedings of the army, and, in conjunction with Bakht Khan, obtained the permission of the King to exact money from the bankers and wealthy Mahommedans of the city.

FARRUKHABAD.

Bakht Khan had left some troops at Farrukhabad before he came to Delhi. He intimated the fact to the King a little before, two months after the breaking out of the mutiny.

HANSI.

Two sowars brought a petition from Hansi, in which the writers stated that they were fighting for the King, and were proceeding to Delhi to fight for religion. This petition was presented to the King. I believe, by Gulab Shah, the commander of the Meerut troops, about six weeks after disturbances. Three sowars came from Hansi.

SIRSA.

Three petitions were received from Sirsa. One from Gouri Shankar, officer of the "Takyur" regiment; the second from a cavalry risaldar, whose name I forget; and the third from Shahzadah Muhammad Azim, of the Commissariat Department. The petitioners stated that they had already performed good service to the King, and added, that they were proceeding to Delhi with all the money of the Customs Department. These petitions were brought by two messengers about six weeks after the mutiny. A reply was sent as usual. Shortly afterwards the troops arrived, bringing with them 30,000 rupees treasure, about 200 bullocks, and 50 or 60 sheep.

KARNAL.

No petition was received from the troops at Karnal.

* 54th N. I.*
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

NASIRABAD.

Two sepoys brought a petition, in which, as usual, the troops signified their readiness to march to Delhi. Mirza Moghal presented the petition to the King, and the usual reply was sent. Between 2,000 to 2,500 men, cavalry and infantry, arrived with a number of guns.

SAUGOR AND JUBULPUR.

I believe petitions came from these places, and that replies were also sent.

THE PANJAB—(Firozpur.)

A sepoy, disguised as a fakir, brought a petition from the Firozpur troops. Mirza Mogha presented the petition to the King. The messenger was told that a reply would be given next day. The man told me he had come from Firozpur, and that the troops at that place were all ready to march to Delhi, and had mutinied against the British Government. I did not see the petition, nor did Mirza Moghal mention to me that any petition had been received from Firozpur. This petition was received about six weeks after the commencement of disturbances, before Bakht Khan had joined. Only Neemuch and Jhansi troops arrived after Bakht Khan; the greater part of other troops had already joined before him.

AMBALA.

A sepoy, in the disguise of a fakir, brought a petition from the Ambala troops; but I cannot speak positively in this matter, nor am I sure that any reply was sent.

PHILOUR.

If I recollect right, I believe that an officer of the Baillie Regiment (the 20th N. I.) brought a petition from the Philip troops, but none of the latter accompanied him. This was two months after the commencement of disturbances. The contents were, that petitioners would march to Delhi after serving the King's cause at Philour. The usual reply was sent. Long afterwards about 200 men came to Delhi.

JALLANDHAR.

I believe that some sepoy, disguised as a traveller, brought a petition from the Jallandhar troops, and some officer of the "Ranjit" Regiment (the 11th N. I.) presented the petition to the King. The contents were as usual, as was also the reply.

SEALKOTE.

No sepoy came from Sealkote with any petition; but a petition was received from that place, and presented to the King by an officer of one of the Delhi mutinous regiments about two months and upwards after the mutiny. The writers expressed their desire to march to Delhi. A reply was ordered to be sent. I do not recollect whether any troops came from Sealkote or not.

JHELUM.

The petition from Jhelum came very late, about three months after the commencement of the mutiny. It was received, I believe, through Kadir Bahab, of the Roorki Sappers and Miners. The subject was as usual, as was also the reply.

RAWUL PINDEE.

Two sepoys, disguised as Brahman travellers, brought a petition from the Rawul Pindeh troops, in which the writers stated that they were prepared to march to Delhi and serve the King. This petition was presented to the King by the officers of the "Mapert" Regiment. A reply was ordered to be written as usual. This petition was received about two months after the breaking out of the mutiny.

LOOLHIANA.

I heard that a petition had been received from Loolhiana, and I believe that one was received; but I do not know through whom it came. I believe a reply was also sent. I do not remember its contents, but I heard that the troops were expected at Delhi. If any petition came it must have arrived about two months after breaking out of disturbances.

No petition came from the troops at Benares, Azimgarh, Gorukhpur, Cawnpur, Meerut, Saharanpur, Bijnour, Mooradabad, Futtehgur, Futtehgar, Bareilly, Budaun, Agra, Shahjapar, Ghazipur.

None also came from the troops at Amriar, Hooshapar, Kangra, Lahore, Attock, Peshawur, Mooldt, Googern, Goograt, Dehra Ismail Khan, Dehra Ghazi Khan, Shahpur, Khandar, or Leiah.

Likewise no petition was received from the troops at Calcutta or Barrackpore or other cantonments in the eastern provinces.

EVIDENCE TAKEN BEFORE THE COURT APPOINTED

No petition was received from the Bombay or Sind troops; but the mutineers represented to the King that the Bombay army had written to them to the effect that they were ready to proceed to Delhi. I heard this once or twice. I cannot speak positively whether any petition came or not.

A petition was received from the Gwalior troops from a place beyond the Chambul (of which I forget the name), in which they said that they had 60 guns and magazine stores in such abundance that 5,000 carts would be required to carry them. But they were unable to cross the Chambul, which was at its height. This petition was received two months after the breaking out of disturbances. They were told in reply they could come when the river had subsided.

No communication was addressed by the Delhi mutineers to the troops of Bikanir, Jaisalmer, Jodhpur, Jaipur, Jhajjar, Alwar, Kotah, or Boondi. Nor was any received from them at Delhi.

Petitions were received by the King from the chiefs of Jhajjar, Ballabhgarh, Farrukhnagar, and from Walid Khan of Mahagir in the Bandalshahri district. In these petitions, they professed allegiance to the King, and excused their personal attendance on the ground that their absence would unsettle their countries. The Jhajjar Navab sent 200 sowars under the command of his father-in-law, Abdul Samad Khan. The Ballabhgarh chief sent 15 sowars. No troops came from Farrukhnagar; and Walid Khan asked for troops and guns, but none were sent until long afterwards, when 200 sowars were sent. Walid Khan was himself present at Delhi at the time of the breaking out of the mutiny. He obtained a patent conferring upon him the government of the Doab, and left Delhi.

Khan Bahadur Khan sent a petition and wakil through the medium of Bakht Khan. He also sent an elephant, a horse, with silver ornaments, and 101 gold medals as present. Several petitions were received from Rao Tula Ram, a king for troops. He sent 40,000 rupees, which was paid into the King's treasury through the medium of Bakht Khan. "Shukkas" were addressed to the following chiefs at the request of the mutinous troops, calling upon them (the chiefs) to come over with their troops and munitions of war.

Jhajjar, Ballabhgarh, Farrukhnagar, Khan Bahadur Khan of Bareilly, Jaipur, Alwar, Jodhpur, Bikanir, Gwalior, and Baila Bai, and Jaisalmar. Two shukkas were addressed to Baila Bai; but she replied to neither of them.

A shukka was addressed to the Patiala Rajah through Bakht Khan. It conveyed the pardon of the King for the Maharajah's faults, at the instance of Abul Islam, and called upon the Maharajah to supply cash, and to fight against the English.

A shukka was also addressed to the Jummaoo chief, and made over for transmission to Bakht Khan. This petition had previously been presented to the King a petition (which was believed to have been forged), purporting to have been written by Rajah Gulab Singh, in which the Rajah was represented as saying that he would soon march to Delhi with his troops, punishing on his way the Maharajah of Patiala; also that the Amir Dost Muhammad Khan was an ally of Jummaoo, and would not fail to render service to the King. The shukka to the address of the Jummaoo chief called upon him to proceed with munitions of war to Delhi.

Replies were received to the effect mentioned above from the chiefs of Jhajjar, Ballabhgarh, Farrukhnagar, and Khan Bahadur Khan of Bareilly, but none were received from Jaipur, Alwar, Jodhpur, Bikanir, Gwalior, Jaisalmar, Patiala, or Jummaoo.

These latter chiefs sent no reply, because they had no inclination to side with the King.

The Jodhpur and Gwalior chiefs would appear to be determined to remain staunch in their allegiance to the British Government. The mutiny of their troops did not alienate those chiefs personally from the British.

No shukka was sent to Bhartpur, because the troops at Delhi said that the Rajah was a child, and the administration was carried on there by British officers.

No communication was addressed to Indore and none was received from there.

Kanwar Singh, the rebel of Shahabad, was not addressed, and no communication was received from him.

No communication was addressed to the Rajah of Benares, or the Rajah of Rewah, nor to the Nawab of Banda, and none was received from any of those chiefs.

No correspondence took place between the King and the chiefs in Nagpur.

Neither the Bhawalpur, nor the Kaparthulla, nor the hill chiefs under the Simla agency were addressed, and no communication was received from any of those chiefs.

The Nepal chief was not addressed, and no communication was received from him.

After the accumulation of the mutinous army at Delhi, shukkas were addressed to those chiefs who were pointed out by the troops. And as the troops signified no desire for the Nepal chief being written to, he was not addressed.

No correspondence passed between the King and the chief of Gujarat in the Deccan, or the chiefs of Bihulistan, Afghanistan or the Khbyur Pass.

At first, the troops said that the King's servants had not written to the chiefs from whom no replies had been received. But when they themselves wrote, and no reply was still received, they said the chiefs were all of them disloyal, and would be punished after the British had been vanquished.

The intelligent among the troops said that the chiefs were watching the turn of events, and were afraid, under the existing circumstances, to act decisively. Gouri Shankar, who is a most intelligent officer, used to observe that the presence of the Government troops on the the hill before Delhi was a painful thorn in their (the mutineers') side, and that as soon as this was removed, all would be right.

The sepoys used to say that there were in the first instance only two regiments of European soldiers on the ridge, but these had diminished to two or three hundred only. And that when these shall have been killed the British would leave the ridge.

None of the officers of the troops expressed a wish for the Bhawalpur Nawab being addressed, and I consider that the Nawab did not address the King, because the former had an old pique against the latter, insomuch as when Nawab Bhawai Khan, the late chief of Bhawalpur, passed through Delhi, the King forbade his son to enter the Dewani-Khas, unless he agreed to lay down his arms and take off his ornaments.

No petition was received from any of the chuklatars or governors of Oudh.

A petition was received from Moulay Liakat Ali, the leader of the religious warriors of Allahabad, in which he intimated that he was about to proceed to Delhi, and asked for military aid in order to reduce his part of the country. No reply was sent at the time, because he was himself expected; but when he came he was introduced to the King by Bakht Khan, and returned after obtaining a patent, appointing him governor of Lucknow. This took place three months after the commencement of disturbances.

No petition was received from the Nana; but, about two months after the breaking out of the mutiny, a confidential agent (a maratha) of the Nana's arrived at Delhi, and was introduced to the King by Mirza Moghal. At the request of the Mirza, a shukka was addressed to the Nana, inviting him over to Delhi. The agent then returned.

No petition was received from any bankers; but an order was addressed to Seth Lakshmi Chand, at the instance of the army, directing him to give a loan to the amount of 1,000,000 rupees sterling, and to send an agent of his own to be placed in charge of the treasury. The Seth was told that the revenue collections would be made over to him, and that he would be allowed interest on his loan; but no reply was received from the Seth.

So far as I am aware, no petition was received from any of the servants of Government; but I heard that a Hindustani, a Mahommadian of Bulandshahr, who held a high office under Government, had joined Wazid Khan. I do not know his name. Shukkas were addressed to Mufti Sadr-ud-Din, the principal Sudder Ameen, Karam Ali Khan Munsiff, Moulay Abbas Ali, Sudder Ameen of Delhi, and to Mirza Muhammad Ali Beg, Tahsildar of Mahroli, inviting them to enter the service of the King in the situations held by them under the British Government. But they all declined the offer. But when Bakht Khan assembled the Moulavis and Ulamas of Delhi in the Jama Masjid and compelled them to declare that it was incumbent to wage a religious war against the British, I am told he (Bakht Khan) compelled Mufti Sadr-ud-Din to put his seal upon the verdict. Moulay Abbas Ali left Delhi, and proceeded to his home across the Jumna before the arrival of Bakht Khan.

No petition was received from Agra from any party, but Moulay Faiz Ahmad, who was employed in the Sudder Board's office, came in person to Delhi, and adopted the King's service. He was placed in charge of the Adalat.

A shukka was addressed to the Nawab of Rampur, but no reply was received from him. Bakht Khan insisted upon the Nawab of Rampur being addressed, and said that when he (Bakht Khan) went to Rampur he promised to him to remain neutral.

Shukkas were also addressed to Nawabs Amin-ud-din Khan and Zia-ud-din Khan, Jagirdars of Lohara, to Hassan Ali Khan, brother of the Nawab of Jhajjar, to Nawab Hamid Ali Khan, all of whom were residing at Delhi, and to Ajit Singh, uncle of the Maharajah of Patiala, directing them to wait upon the King. All these chiefs accordingly waited upon the King, but wrote no petition in reply to the shukkas addressed to them, and when, at the instance of the army, these chiefs were called upon to pay certain sums of money according to the circumstances of each, each and all made some excuse, and paid nothing. For this reason the troops were intent upon plundering them, and in one instance carried out their intention. Mirza Abul Bakr, grandson of the King, who commanded the regular cavalry, entered and plundered the house of Hamid Ali Khan, and carried the Nawab prisoner to the police. But Zia-ud-din Khan and Amin-ud-din Khan were prepared to resist the troops, and therefore escaped being plundered.

A shukka was addressed to the Chief of Purondi; but he sent no reply. I do not remember whether any shukka was addressed to the chief of Dojana; but no petition was received from him.

I will now proceed to describe from what districts petitions were received from among the general population of the country.

District Gurgaon.

The zamindars of Gurgaon proper addressed a petition, bringing to the notice of the King the disorderly state of the district, and begging that an officer might be deputed to assume the administration. Thereupon Moulay Faiz-ul-hak, who had come in from Alwar, proposed that his sister's son (whose name I forget), who was formerly employed in that district under the British Government, should be appointed. This man was accordingly appointed "Ziladar," i.e., in charge of the district. But I am not aware whether he went to Gurgaon or not. This appointment was made only about 15 or 20 days before the fall of Delhi. Faiz-ul-hak also appointed several tahsildars under the ziladar.
Rewari.

Rao Tula Ram, the perpetual settlement holder of Rewari, sent an agent of his own through Bakht Khan, with a petition, in which he stated that he had been managing the territory, but that the collections of the current harvest had been expended among the army. He offered to pay a “nazam” to the amount of 45,000 rupees in consideration of the territory being granted to him in jagir in perpetuity. Bakht Khan accordingly obtained a patent conferring Rewari in perpetual jagir on Tula Ram. This was done three months after the breaking out of the rebellion. Ten days before the fall of Delhi the sum of 40,000 rupees was paid into the King’s treasury by Tula Ram.

Badshapur.

The zamindars of Badshapur applied for a tahsildar. The ziladar was ordered to arrange for the appointment of a tahsildar.

District of Delhi.

No communication was received from any party of any note out of the walls of the city.

District of Rohtak.

The Rohtak people sent no petition to the King, but they arranged for supplying provisions to the troops.

Hissar.

The guards attached to the Hisar gaol, as well as the officials of the customs department, sent petitions to the King. I do not remember the names of the writers; they stated that they were anxious to proceed to Delhi. This communication was received two months after the breaking out of the disturbances.

Karnal.

No petition was received from this district.

Sirsa.

I have already described the conduct of Shahzadah Muhammad Azim. No communication was received from any of the zamindars of this district.

Meerut.

No communication was received from this district.

Bulandshahr.

The conduct of Waliadad Khan has been already described. No communication was received from or addressed to any other party.

Saharanpur and Muzafarnagar.

No communication was either addressed to or received from any party in these districts.

Bijnur.

A petition was received from the zamindars of this district; they begged that the administration might be assumed by the King. They were informed, in reply, that the management would be assumed as soon as the troops should march to that district. This petition was received three months after the breaking out of the mutiny.

Muradabad.

No petition was received from any rebel in that district, nor was any party addressed from Delhi.

Bareilly.

A petition was received from Khan Bahadur Khan, who had been elevated to the governorship by Bakht Khan. He also sent an agent with an elephant, a horse, and 100 gold mohurs as a present for the King. I forget the name of the agent; he was introduced to the King by Bakht Khan. A shukka was addressed in reply, conveying the satisfaction of the King, and directing Khan Bahadur Khan to remit to Delhi the surplus balance of his collections after defraying the expenses.

Budaun.

No communication was received from any party in this district.

Pilibhit.

None from here.

Mathura
FOR THE TRIAL OF THE KING OF DELHI.

MATHURA DISTRICT.

The brother of Dundi Khan, the jagirdar of Garhi, near Mathura, sent a petition by his nephew, in which he applied for the release of his jagirs which had been resumed by the British Government. Bakht Khan supported the application. This took place about three months after the commencement of the disturbances. Bakht Khan insisted upon the bearer of the petition accompanying the troops in one of their attacks upon the Government troops. The man (Umrao Balladur) was wounded on the occasion, and died within a week. Bakht Khan had obtained a patent granting the Istimdarabi rights to the applicant. But Umrao Balladur having died at Delhi, the patent never reached the intended grantee.

DISTRICT OF AGRA.

No communication was received from this district; but I have already mentioned that Moulavie Faiz Ahmad came from that city in person; Wazir Khan, doctor, (sub-assistant surgeon) also came; he knew English well. Bakht Khan was his supporter, and caused a patent to be granted him, appointing him governor of Agra. Wazir Khan accompanied Bakht Khan when the latter fled from Delhi.

DISTRICTS OF ALIGARH, CAWNPUR, AND FATEHGARH.

No correspondence passed between Delhi and these districts.

MAINPUR.

A petition was received from the Rajah of Mainpuri, asking for troops. Mirza Moghal was ordered to arrange, after consulting the officers of the army, for dispatching troops to Mainpuri. But next day, the officers represented that the troops were not willing to march until they had driven off the British troops before Delhi. A reply was sent to this effect accordingly.

No communication was received from any other party in this district.

DISTRICTS OF GORAKHPUR AND FATEHPUR HASWA.

I have no remembrance that any communication was received from this district or from the district of Kumaon.

DISTRICT OF ALLAHABAD.

I have already mentioned that Moullab Liakat Ali came from this district, and obtained a patent appointing him governor. No communication was received from any other party.

RAJAH OF BANDA, NEAR REWAH.

No shukka was addressed to this chief, nor was any communication received from him.

DISTRICTS OF AZIMGARH, SHAHZAHANPUR, EТАWAH, GHAZIPUR, BENARES, AND GYA.

No communication passed between the King and these districts.

BUNDUKHAND, JUBULPUR, SAUGOR, MALWA, AND THE DECCAN TERRITORIES.

I have no remembrance of any correspondence having passed between Delhi and these districts.

THE NIZAM OF HYDERABAD (DECCAN), CUTCHE AND GUJRAT. THE EASTERN PROVINCES; CALCUTTA, BARKAKPORE, MONGHYR, DINAPORE, &C.

No correspondence passed between the King and the Nizam, or any of the latter's subjects, nor between the King and any parties in Cutch or Gujerat. I have no remembrance of any communication having been received from the Eastern districts.

PATNA.

Neither the Nawab of Patna, nor any other party, addressed the King, nor were these addressed from Delhi.

THE PANJAB.

No communication was received from any party in the Panjab.

No communication was received from any of the zamindars of the Bari Doab district in the Panjab, nor were any addressed from Delhi.

I did not hear the troops making mention of any luggage men from the Panjab. No communication was received from any of the Bundelkhand tribes, nor were they addressed from Delhi, and no person of that tribe came to Delhi.

No correspondence passed between the King and the Akhund of Swat; but two men were introduced by Bakht Khan to the King as having been sent by the Akhund Hassan Askari took them before the King. These men were both "Wilayatis" (people of Afghanistan). One, who looked rather a respectable man, presented a sword on the part of the Akhund to the King. He also produced a writing bearing the seal of the

Akhund
Akund, the purport of which was that the bearer was the Akundul's "khalif" (vicegerent). He requested that it might be proclaimed in the city that the followers of the Akund of Swat were on their way to Delhi for the purpose of joining in the religious war. But next day a synod (I do not know his name) told the King that the man had not been really sent by the Akund of Swat, nor was he a follower of the Akund, and that the man had forged the writing which he had represented as being that of the Akund. The King gave orders to Bakht Khan to inquire into it; but I do not know what Bakht Khan did in the matter. I know, however, that the man left Delhi three days afterwards.

The King's Administrative Policy.

An order was issued at one time prohibiting the army and princes from interfering in the general administration of the State. It was proposed that justice should be administered by muftis and sadat-ul-sudras, and that neither the army nor revenue officers were to interfere. The princes, however, never acted upon this. The princes, supported by the troops, always interfered. The King himself appointed tahsilars at Pahalw, Hodal, and Shahdara, and a ziarat at Gurgon; but no revenue was collected. The princes, also, resolved to send their troops to collect revenue; but the measure was not carried out. The "Adalat" was presided over by Moula Faiz Ahmad, who had arrived from Agra, and the princes Mirza Khan Sultan and Mirza Moghal. A kotwal and thawnna was appointed in the city; but I do not remember the names of the thanadars. First of all Mir-ul-din Hasan Khan, son of Nawab Kudrat-ulah Khan, inhabitant of Delhi, was appointed kotwal; but he was dismissed after a short time, in consequence of his oppressing the people. After him the post of kotwal was given, at the recommendation of Khwaja Wajib-ul-din Khan, to Kazi Faizullah, of Delhi, and next to Mir Mubarak Shah, a synad of Rohilkhand. The princes were also appointed at Najaf Garh, Mahabali, Shahdara, Paharganj, and Bhadrampur; but I do not remember their names. Besides the princes, Bakht Khan also interfered in these matters. Indeed he had caused an order to be issued to the thanadars and kotwals enjoining them to act up to Bakht Khan's orders.

The sepoyas used to say that, after they had made themselves masters of the whole country, they would allot different provinces to the several princes. I believe many men were not appointed for the purpose of conducting the administration, and those that were, were nominated either by Bakht Khan or the princes.

No governor was appointed for Meerut. The governorship of Bulandshahr was conferred on Wahid Khan. A patent was granted to Wazir Khan, doctor, appointing him governor of Oudh; but he never left Delhi to assume charge of his office. No man was nominated for Aligarh. The governor of Bahadur Khan was Bahadur Khan of Rohilkhand. No more appointments were made. No man went to Rajpura, and although one was nominated to the Gurgaon district, he never went to take charge of the district.

I can give no detailed information regarding the discipline of the army. The King was never consulted in this matter; but I understand that the troops which were detached for sallying out and attacking the Government forces, used to be composed of three or four sections, for instance, the Naseerabad and Neemuch sections, and so on, according to the regiments who composed the attacking column. This was arranged, the day preceding that on which the attack was to be made, by the different officers in mutual consultation at the residence of Mirza Moghal. At all other times the sepoyas lodged themselves as they pleased, indiscriminately, without reference to their regiments.

Gouri Shankar had obtained permission to assemble the officers and confirm the different parties in their ranks enjoyed by them while in the service of the British Government. But no such meeting was ever convened. No vacancies which occurred were filled; each continued to hold his former rank.

My opinion is, that it was not possible to preserve proper discipline in the army. The troops as a body were offended at the Governor-general having been granted to Bakht Khan. They actually addressed a petition to the King in which they signified their unwillingness to be commanded by Bakht Khan. They represented that Bakht Khan was only an artillery officer, unfit for the office of governor; that he had neither brought in any treasure, nor did he show proper deference to the King. And they added that Mirza Moghal, the King's son, who had been already entrusted with full powers in military matters, was fit for the post of Governor-general, and that the troops as a body were willing to be commanded by him. The King forwarded this petition to Bakht Khan, with a request that he would suggest a proper reply. He suggested that the army might be divided into three divisions, one to be composed of the infantry regiments of Delhi and Meerut; the second, of the troops who accompanied Bakht Khan, the Neemuch brigade and the Sirsa men; and the third division to comprise the rest of the troops. The King sent for Mirza Moghal, and explained to him accordingly.

The reason of the ascendancy of Bakht Khan was this. When he first arrived, he advised the King not to entrust too much power in the hands of his sons, and suggested that all orders be communicated to him (Bakht Khan), in which case everything would go on... on as should be desired by the King. The King was already dissatisfied with the insubordinate conduct of his sons, so this advice of Bakht Khan suited his own wishes, and Bakht Khan rose daily in the estimation of the King.

The Wahabis.*

During the disturbances a number of Wahabis arrived from Tonk. They complained that the Nawab had neither given them money nor any help. Wahabis also came from other directions.

Bakht Khan was himself a Wahabi, as were also Muhammad Ghafi, risaldar, and Moulay Imam Khan, also a risaldar. Moulay Abdul Glaffur and Moulay Sarfaraz Ali were also Wahabis. Sarfaraz Ali was constituted by Bakht Khan the leader of the religious warriors, and Bakht Khan supported these men.

A larger number of Wahabis joined after the arrival of Bakht Khan.

These Wahabis printed and published a proclamation, inviting all Mahommedans to arm and fight for their religion. A fatwa was also published, declaring that it was the duty of all Mahommedans to make religious war, and that otherwise their families and children would be destroyed and ruined.

This proclamation was distinct from that of Bahadur Khan.

Wahabis came from several parts of the country; from Jaipur, Bulpai, Hansi, Hissar, and some Wilayatis; but I do not remember the names of the particular places from which they came. The details were contained in the records of Mirza Moghal’s office.

Out of Delhi, the Hindus were as much hostile to the British Government as the Mahommedans at first, and the same was the case within the city itself. But when Bakht Khan came in and assembled the Mahommedans, and compelled the moulavis to give in “fatwas” enjoining upon the Mahommedans the duty of making religious war upon the British, their fanaticism was aroused, and they rose up in a body against Government.

At Bulandshahr, Aigurah, and Meerut, &c., the Hindus were as much hostile to Government as the Mahommedans.

Bakht Khan once represented to the King that a man had arrived from the Akhund of Swat. The next day two men were introduced to the King by Pirzadah Hasan Askari; one of them presented a sword on the part of the Akhund.
